MILE-HIGH MANIA

Peyton Manning's laser focus on winning a title in Denver this season has Demaryius Thomas and the orange-clad denizens of Mile High primed for a Super run. But can the Broncos overcome the Colts and their old nemesis, the Patriots? Keep reading.

EDITOR'S LETTER

The 2015 NFL season will kick off accompanied by a couple of conspicuous absences (and I'm not even talking about Tom Brady or Le'Veon Bell). We all know that football is a dangerous, violent game, but as fans, we often prefer to ignore the inherent risks that the sport presents to its participants. The players themselves don't have that luxury. This offseason has seen a couple of high-profile early retirements, as Patrick Willis and Chris Borland have weighed short-term riches and glory against long-term health and decided in favor of the latter. It's a growing trend that we address in our feature story "Leaving It All Behind" on page 34.

Even as scintillating new talents such as Jameis Winston and Marcus Mariota take their places on sports' biggest stage, the NFL's revolving door continues to spit out casualties of the game's intrinsic hazards. The NFL remains a sports and entertainment juggernaut — just check the TV ratings and obsessive 365-day NFL news cycle for evidence — but we can't pretend that there isn't a long-term downside to stepping onto a gridiron with other fleet, aggressive, helmet-clad weapons of mass destruction. Just ask Borland and Willis.

Thankfully for us fans, many of the world's greatest athletes have determined that playing the game is worth the risk. One of them is 39 and on a seemingly ageless, endless quest to burnish his legacy. Peyton Manning enters the 2015 season with his Super Bowl window still open, but with a clear sense of urgency driving him to make it happen this year. Can he overcome old rival Tom Brady — not to mention the NFC standard-bearer, be it Russell Wilson or Aaron Rodgers? We reveal our opinions in the pages that follow, but we value yours as well. Write to us at editor@athlonsports.com and let us know your opinion of this year's annual and what you expect out of the 2015 season. We'd love to know what you think.

Enjoy the season.

IMMEDIATE CASH PAYOUTS TO WINNERS | ONE-DAY FANTASY FOOTBALL LEAGUES FOR REAL MONEY | NO SEASON-LONG COMMITMENT

CHRIS PRINCE - FANDUEL USER SINCE 2010

FanDuel is a whole new way of playing fantasy football. Every league lasts just one day. The money is real and winners get paid that same night. And there's no season-long commitment. You only play when you want.

This is Chris Prince. He's beermakersfan on FanDuel, and he has plenty of reasons to smile. This 37-year-old from Detroit has won $724,938 playing in one-day fantasy leagues on FanDuel.

A New Way to Play Fantasy Football!
FanDuel is the hottest thing in fantasy football. Our one-week fantasy football leagues pack the thrill of an entire season into just one week. You play for real money against other people and winners get paid cash that same week.

Over $40 Million Cash Paid Out to Winners Every Single Week
FanDuel paid out over $500 million in cash to over 853,000 league winners in 2014. That number is only getting bigger. We'll be paying out over $2 billion cash to winners in 2015, including $40 million every week of the NFL season. That's a huge number and you may be skeptical, but don't be. Our cash prize pools can be this large because we literally have over a million players today and thousands more joining every single day.

How is This Different From Season-Long Fantasy Football?

- Salary cap leagues that last one week
- Huge variety of league sizes and prize pools
- Instant weekly cash payouts to league winners
- No season-long commitment - you only play when you want
- Thousands of one-week money leagues run every week of the season
- Play for real money - use your credit card or Paypal

EXTRA POINTS

When 14-1 Isn't Good Enough

If a dude in Delaware didn't have Andrew Luck, he wouldn't have any luck at all.

In Week 2 last year, the Colts quarterback engineered a two-touchdown lead over the Eagles in the second half, only to watch it evaporate. His TD toss early in the fourth quarter reclaimed the advantage, but he was picked off to set up Philly's tying score with 3:25 remaining. At stake for Luck was exclusive custody of the NFL record for most starts to begin a career without losing twice in a row — a mark he shared with Dan Marino at 33. On the line for the unidentified Delaware dude was something far more tangible.

The man had placed a five-dollar, 15-team parlay bet against the spread in the state's sports lottery, and all he needed to become the contest's first winner since 2011 was for Indy to prevail by three or more points. His payday for a proposition that carried odds of about 32,000 to 1? A hundred grand.

Alas, if Indy fans' hearts broke as Philadelphia kicker Cody Parkey split the uprights with a tie-breaking field goal as the clock clicked to 0:00, one heart in Delaware came to a dead stop.

"Honestly, we were rooting for the guy," lottery director Vernon Kirk told ESPN. "It was agonizing to watch when you knew one player was so close to such a big payout."

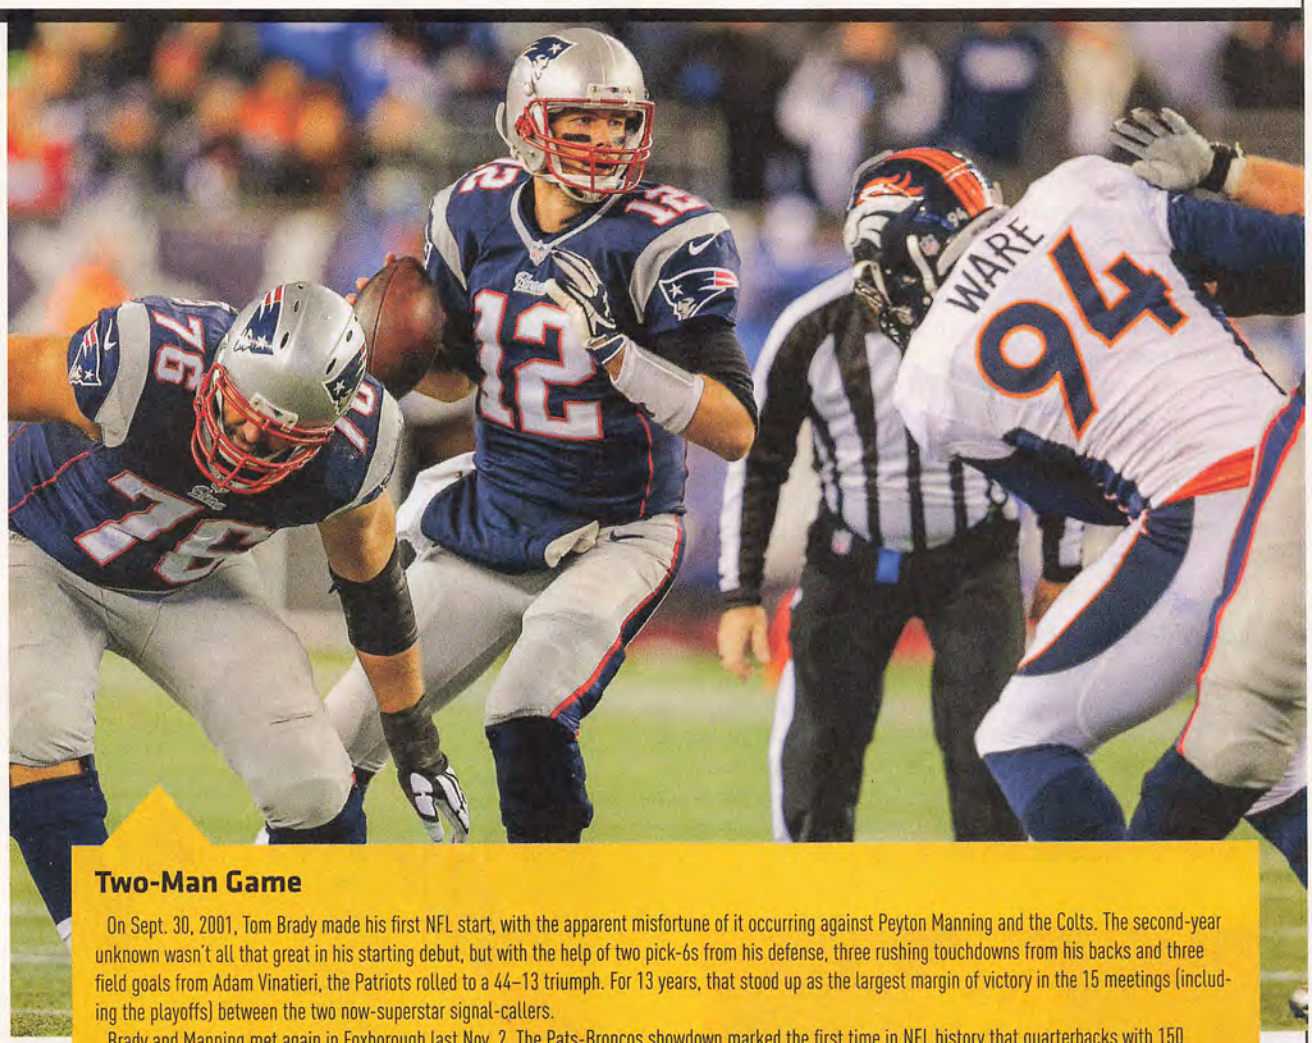
Amidst an Ugly Year: A Small Still Voice

The No Fun League found endless ways to live up to its nickname off the field in 2014, so this story was a refreshing change-of-pace:

It became obvious toward the end of training camp that Devon Still wasn't going to make Cincinnati's 53-man roster. The third-year defensive tackle, who had yet to make a professional start, was noticeably distracted. And for good reason: Still's four-year-old daughter Leah was battling stage 4 cancer with a 50-50 prognosis.

Instead of sending the former second-round draft pick out onto the mean streets of free agency, however, the Bengals signed him to their practice squad. The gesture meant that Still would continue to receive a paycheck and retain the health insurance that would cover the estimated $1 million it was going to take to try to keep Leah alive. In addition, he wouldn't be obligated to travel with the team, allowing him more time to spend with his daughter as she underwent chemotherapy and surgery.

The arrangement turned out to be largely moot, as Still performed well enough to see action in a dozen games. All the while, the team undertook a program to benefit Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center in which nearly 15,000 of Still's No. 75 jerseys were sold (10,000 of which were manufactured on the Bengals' tab), raising $1.3 million. And the best news of all: As of the family's March announcement, Leah's cancer was in remission.



Two-Man Game

On Sept. 30, 2001, Tom Brady made his first NFL start, with the apparent misfortune of it occurring against Peyton Manning and the Colts. The second-year unknown wasn't all that great in his starting debut, but with the help of two pick-6s from his defense, three rushing touchdowns from his backs and three field goals from Adam Vinatieri, the Patriots rolled to a 44–13 triumph. For 13 years, that stood up as the largest margin of victory in the 15 meetings (including the playoffs) between the two now-superstar signal-callers.

Brady and Manning met again in Foxborough last Nov. 2. The Pats-Broncos showdown marked the first time in NFL history that quarterbacks with 150 wins opposed each other. It also was the first time that QB combatants came into a game so hot that each had amassed a double-digit TD total without an interception in their previous three games.

Unlike that initial confrontation, when neither managed 200 yards, this one was an aerial extravaganza. Each put it up more than 50 times (yet another NFL first), combining for 771 yards. Surprisingly, it was just the second instance in their hostilities that both eclipsed 300. Brady accounted for "only" 333 of that total, but when the atmosphere was finally cleared of footballs and with the home crowd chanting "Bra-dy's Bet-ter!" he was a 43–21 victor in the second-largest margin in their head-to-head high jinks.

Knuckleheads on (and off) Parade

Chafed because he got nary a carry when the Steelers toppled Tennessee on Monday night, Nov. 17, LeGarrette Blount walked off the field before the game was over. On Tuesday, he was released. New England, long an island of misfit boys, signed him within 48 hours. The move was especially curious because the Patriots were fresh off a game in which Jonas Gray had scored four times and rushed for 201 yards — 70 more than in his previous two-plus years in the NFL combined. What seemed to be madness in Bill Belichick's method was, as usual, opportune.

By the time Sunday rolled around, Gray was a Sports Illustrated cover boy, his jersey was on display at the Pro Football Hall of Fame — and he was in the doghouse. He failed to start against Detroit, evidently because he'd missed the Friday practice, and he never left the pine. Instead, Shane Vereen saw 62 snaps, and Belichick even dusted off Brandon Bolden (a former PED suspendee) who hadn't sniffed the rock in six weeks. Blount — a Pat for all of 72 hours — had his number called 12 times in 17 snaps. He turned the totes into two TDs and 78 yards — only two fewer than Gray would collect the rest of the season.

The postscript is that crime in Foxborough, as has been proven repeatedly, does pay. Bolden got a new two-year deal. The chastened Gray was retained, as was Blount, who's been suspended for the 2015 opener due to an arrest for marijuana possession. Vereen, the "nice guy" is this dope opera, was shown the door, and he signed with the Giants.

Hurry-Up Offense

Everyone was in a hurry in Week 10, it seemed. The slate produced some of the hastiest heroics in league lore.

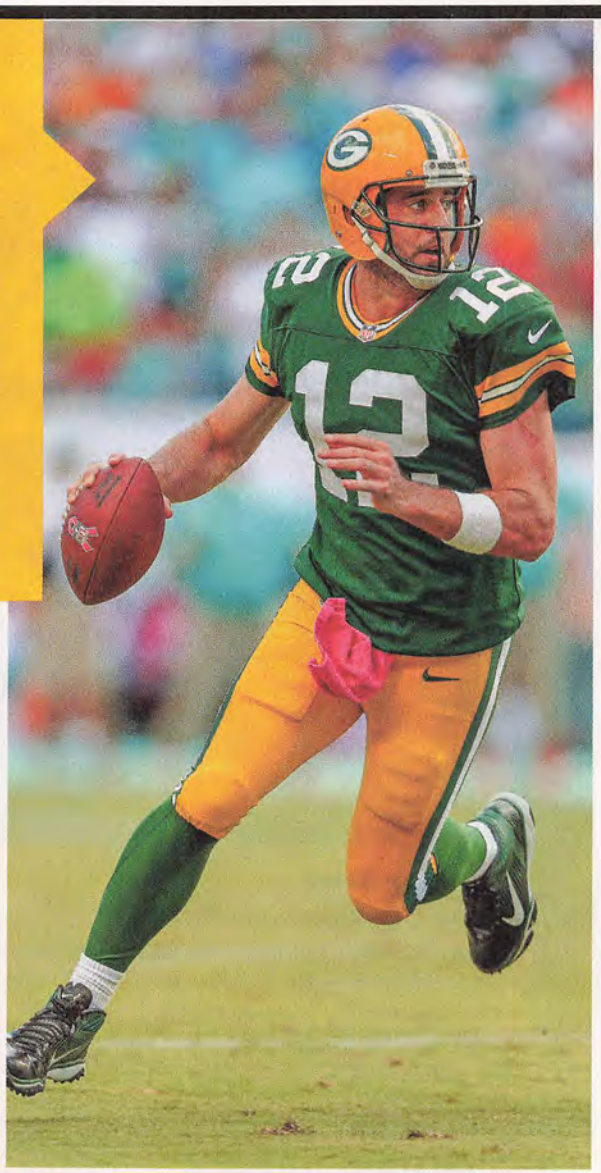
When the day started, only three quarterbacks in the last 30 years had thrown five touchdown passes in a span of less than 17 minutes. When it ended, the trio had become a quintet.

Not only did Aaron Rodgers require a mere 16:25 to flick five scores against Chicago, but he also added another to match Daryle Lamonica's NFL record for a half. When the chemtrails cleared, Green Bay held the second-largest halftime lead in history at 42–0. Earlier in the day, in Oakland, Peyton Manning needed 18 more seconds than Rodgers to get it done, but he strafed the Raiders for a five-spot intersecting the second and third quarters.

The scoring tsunami wasn't limited to the quarterbacks.

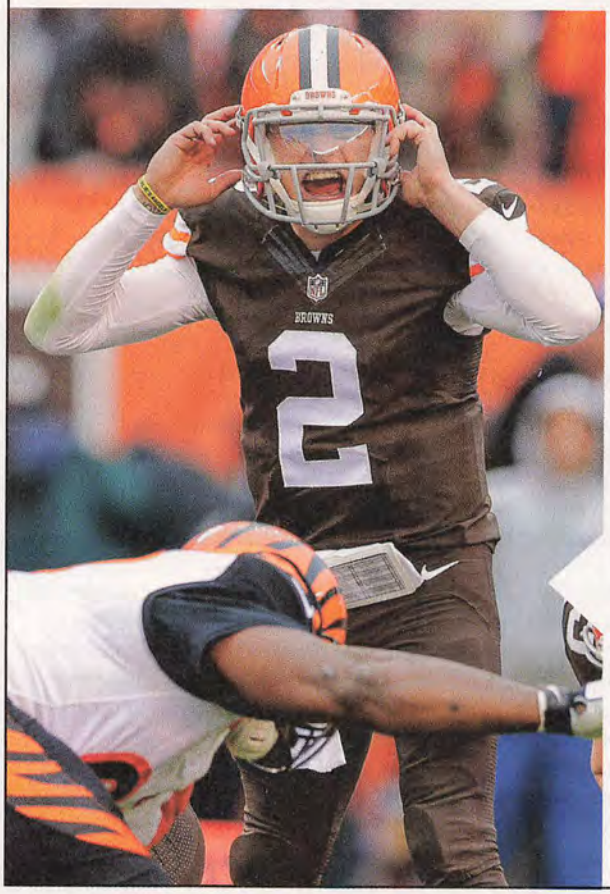
Facing the Rams in Arizona, the Cardinals needed just 84 seconds to tally a pair of defensive TDs in the fourth quarter, as Antonio Cromartie's 14-yard fumble return followed Patrick Peterson's 30-yard pick-6 in a span of four St. Louis snaps.

The day's honorable mention for quick quirkiness went to Lions punter Sam Martin. He didn't change the scoreboard, but in a duration of 16:36, he executed two fake punts, completing passes on both (one for a first down). It was just the second time in the past decade that a punter had attempted more than one aerial in a game.



Two-and-a-Half Men

When the league's lengthy inventory of embarrassing publicity included news that LeSean McCoy had left a 20-cent "gratuity" for a $61.56 tab last September, actor Charlie Sheen manned up with a $1,000 offer to the snubbed waiter. Later, Chad Johnson kept the good karma flowing with a $300 tip on a $351.92 bill in a Montreal establishment. "Sundays are slow, this should help," he inscribed on the receipt, "I love you." Ex-Ocho subsequently retweeted a message from a woman who was so uplifted by the gesture that she said she abandoned her plans to commit suicide.



HE SAID IT

"Jerry comes across as a rich a-hole." – A Jimmy Johnson email after Jerry Jones said he had no plans to put the two-time Super Bowl-winning coach in the Cowboys Rings of Honor

Like A Wrecking Ball

Johnny Manziel crowed after the draft that he was going to come in and "wreck the league." He almost accomplished that in his first start, but not exactly in the way he boasted. The statistical shrapnel from his 30–0 shellacking by the Bengals — the first shutout of his career at any level, he said — included this:

- The Browns ran only 38 plays, the fewest in an NFL game in 15 years.
- Their 10 drives ended with seven punts, two interceptions and the final whistle.
- The average length of their drives was not even a "first down" — 9.4 yards.
- Manziel completed 10-of-18 passes for 80 yards and rushed for just 13 on five carries.
- He was sacked three times and lost seven yards on two designed runs.

"Very humbling," he admitted.

Points Taken

In Week 4 of the 2012 season, the Jaguars-Bengals game was a pick 'em. In Week 16 of the 2014 campaign, Jacksonville was a three-point favorite over the Titans. In between, the Jags (who won seven times, but were outscored by 521 points) were underdogs in 42 consecutive games.

When Jacksonville finally snapped the "dog" streak on the week of their 21–13 triumph over Tennessee, it was the first NFL pairing in 21 years between two clubs both at least 10 games below .500 that late in a season. Unlike the previous stinker in 1993 (Patriots 7, Bengals 2), this one failed to live up to its lack of promise. The Thursday Night Football affair was, in fact, such a (relatively) well-played game that it was just the third turnover-free contest in history between two 10-loss teams.

So, Oakland, you're on the clock. The Raiders own the longest active underdog streak at 24.

Holy Butt Cheeks, Batman!

The contentious mystery about what position Jimmy Graham actually plays for franchise designation compensation purposes has been solved — by The Joker.

When the Saints' hybrid pass-catcher jumped into the front row of the Mercedes-Benz Superdome stands in celebration of a touchdown last November, a heavily made-up, lime green-clad fan decked out as the Supervillain from Batman reached down and clutched the most accessible portion of Graham's anatomy. One Scott McGowan of Baton Rouge not only grabbed a handful of hind quarter, but gave it four purposeful squeezes. More like a massage, really.

"That'll probably be my last (leap into the stands) after I got groped up," grumbled Graham afterwards. "Some people were trying to thank me a little too much."

The fondling fan, who says he's been a season ticket holder for 12 years, concluded: "He's definitely a tight end."

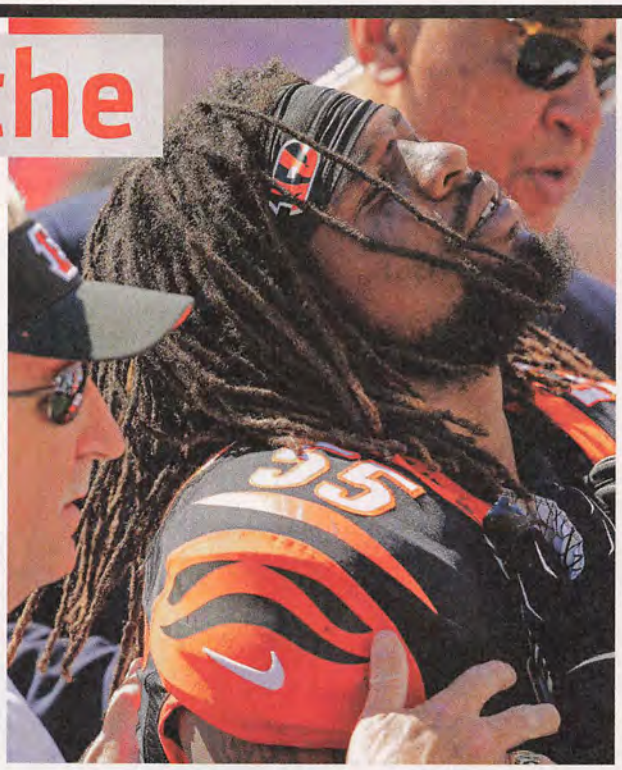
Calendar of the WEIRD



AUG. 30 The Vikings waive linebacker Mike Zimmer, depriving him of the opportunity to play for unrelated head coach Mike Zimmer.

SEPT. 7 The Rams open the season with three undrafted quarterbacks on their active roster.

SEPT. 7 Vontaze Burfict, attempting a sack, must leave with a concussion after spearing Joe Flacco in the cup.

SEPT. 14 Every quarterback who throws an interception sees his team lose the game.

SEPT. 14 Jacksonville's first snap in Washington territory comes with 8:45 left in the contest.

SEPT. 21 There are 25 points scored in the Patriots victory over the Raiders — 10 by Stephen Gostkowski, nine by Sebastian Janikowski and six by Rob Gronkowski.

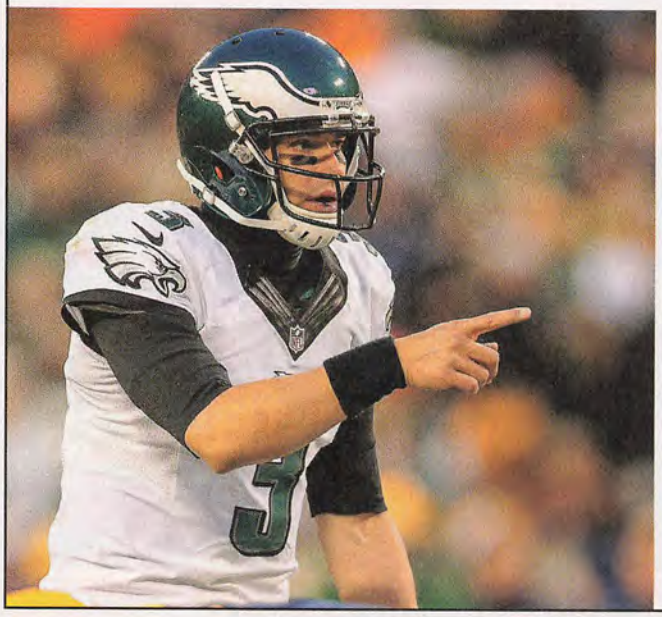
SEPT. 21 The Cardinals have only nine guys on the field when they block a 49ers field goal.

SEPT. 21 Lions linebacker Stephen Tulloch tears his ACL celebrating a sack, then claims afterwards, "I'd do it again, brother."

SEPT. 28 The Packers top the Bears, 38–17, as for just the second time in NFL history, neither team punts.

OCT. 6 Percy Harvin has three touchdowns against Washington called back, including two on successive plays, because of penalties.

OCT. 12 For a few minutes of real time, all four games currently underway are tied during the second quarter.



OCT. 12 The Bucs run a dozen consecutive plays that fail to gain a yard against the Ravens.

OCT. 19 Both Drew Brees and Brian Hoyer throw 10 consecutive passes without completing one — their teams' longest droughts in 12 and 20 years, respectively.

OCT. 26 The Cardinals and Eagles combine for 104 passing attempts, yet no quarterbacks are sacked.

OCT. 26 For the second time in three seasons, the Patriots score three touchdowns in less than a minute.

OCT. 26 Jets quarterback Geno Smith completes more passes to the Bills (three) than to his own team (two).

NOV. 2 Carson Palmer wins for a fifth straight time when he is intercepted in his first drive.

NOV. 8 Justin Bieber attends the Steelers' weekly Bible study.

NOV. 9 After winning their previous two games with scores at 0:00 and 1:48, Detroit does it again at 0:29.

NOV. 9 Anquan Boldin drops as many passes (four) in the first half as he did in all of 2013.

NOV. 9 After recording only one takeaway in their first nine games, the Jets come up with four in an upset of Pittsburgh.

NOV. 9 Jay Cutler falls to 1–10 with 22 interceptions against his team's archrival, the Packers.

NOV. 13 The Bills have not scored a TD on their last 21 "drives."

NOV. 16 The Chiefs dump the Seahawks, 24–20, despite completing only two passes (for nine yards apiece) to wide receivers.

NOV. 16 Mark Sanchez tops 300 yards and throws for multiple TDs in his first start for the Eagles — something he never did in 62 starts as a Jet.

NOV. 16 J.J. Watt is flagged for roughing the punter twice in the first half.

NOV. 17 Ben Roethlisberger moves to 18–0 when opposing a rookie quarterback.

NOV. 18 After his Wikipedia entry lists him as deceased, Emmanuel Sanders tweets a photo of himself surrounded by comely females, which he captions, "I must be in heaven."

NOV. 20 When the Raiders upset the Chiefs, teams with QB Matt Schaub on their roster end their 24-game losing streak.

NOV. 27 Although there never before had been two games ending in a 19–3 score in any NFL season, the Seahawks prevail 19–3 for the second straight week.

NOV. 30 Washington ends its drought of nine entire games and 38 futile attempts by converting a play of 3rd-and-10 or longer into a first down.

NOV. 30 Home teams outscore the visitors 72–16 in the early-kickoff portion of the slate.

NOV. 30 The Steelers tie an NFL record for first downs in a loss by recording 36.

DEC. 3 Peter King calculates that Colin Kaepernick uses 87 words to respond to the 32 questions asked of him at San Francisco's weekly presser.

DEC. 3 Thirteen years after being released by the Cowboys, Ryan Leaf is released from prison.

DEC. 4 Arian Foster conducts his entire post-practice interview speaking with a British accent.

DEC. 4 For just the second time ever, a quarterback (Tony Romo) completes 80 percent of his passes and a teammate (DeMarco Murray) rushes for more than 175 yards.

DEC. 7 The Panthers, who had scored a total of 30 first-quarter points in their first 12 games, hang 17 on the Saints in the first nine minutes.

DEC. 7 After never having allowed a single player to record more than 3.0 sacks in a game against them in their history, the Dolphins do so for a third time in 2014.

DEC. 7 St. Louis' captains for the pregame toss in Washington are the six players who were taken with the draft picks dealt for Robert Griffin III.

DEC. 7 The Seahawks limit a third straight foe to its season low in points and yards.

DEC. 14 Seven different Packers receivers drop one pass apiece in a loss to Buffalo.

DEC. 15 Of Jay Cutler's five "completions" that travel more than 10 yards, three are caught by the Saints.

DEC. 15 Jets owner Woody Johnson, who employs John Idzik as his GM, accidentally "favorites" a tweet from a fan that says: "@woodyjohnson4 You really need to #Fireldzik at this point. The roster is garbagio."

DEC. 18 The Titans reach the end zone on an opening drive for the first time in 18 games but lose to the Jaguars anyway.

DEC. 21 The Bucs, Bills and Colts combine for 30 rushing yards on 37 carries in their losses.

DEC. 28 On the 229th pass of his career, Ryan Lindley throws his first touchdown.

DEC. 28 Antonio Brown takes a punt to the house for the third time in his career — all against Cincinnati.

DEC. 28 Kansas City is the third team (and first in 54 years) to go through a season with no TD catches by a wide receiver.

DEC. 28 Russell Wilson fumbles for the 12th and 13th (and final) times of 2014 — all of them recovered by his own team.

DEC. 28 Seattle ends its regular season with a 29th victory by 10 or more points since suffering its last loss by that margin.

JAN. 3 Ryan Lindley averages 1.3 yards on his 32 dropbacks in Arizona's wild card loss to Carolina, failing to gain yardage on 21 of them.

JAN. 4 Matthew Stafford falls to 0–18 in his career (playoffs included) in road games against teams that finished the season over .500.

JAN. 4 Andy Dalton starts and finishes his fourth playoff game without ever having thrown a pass with the lead.

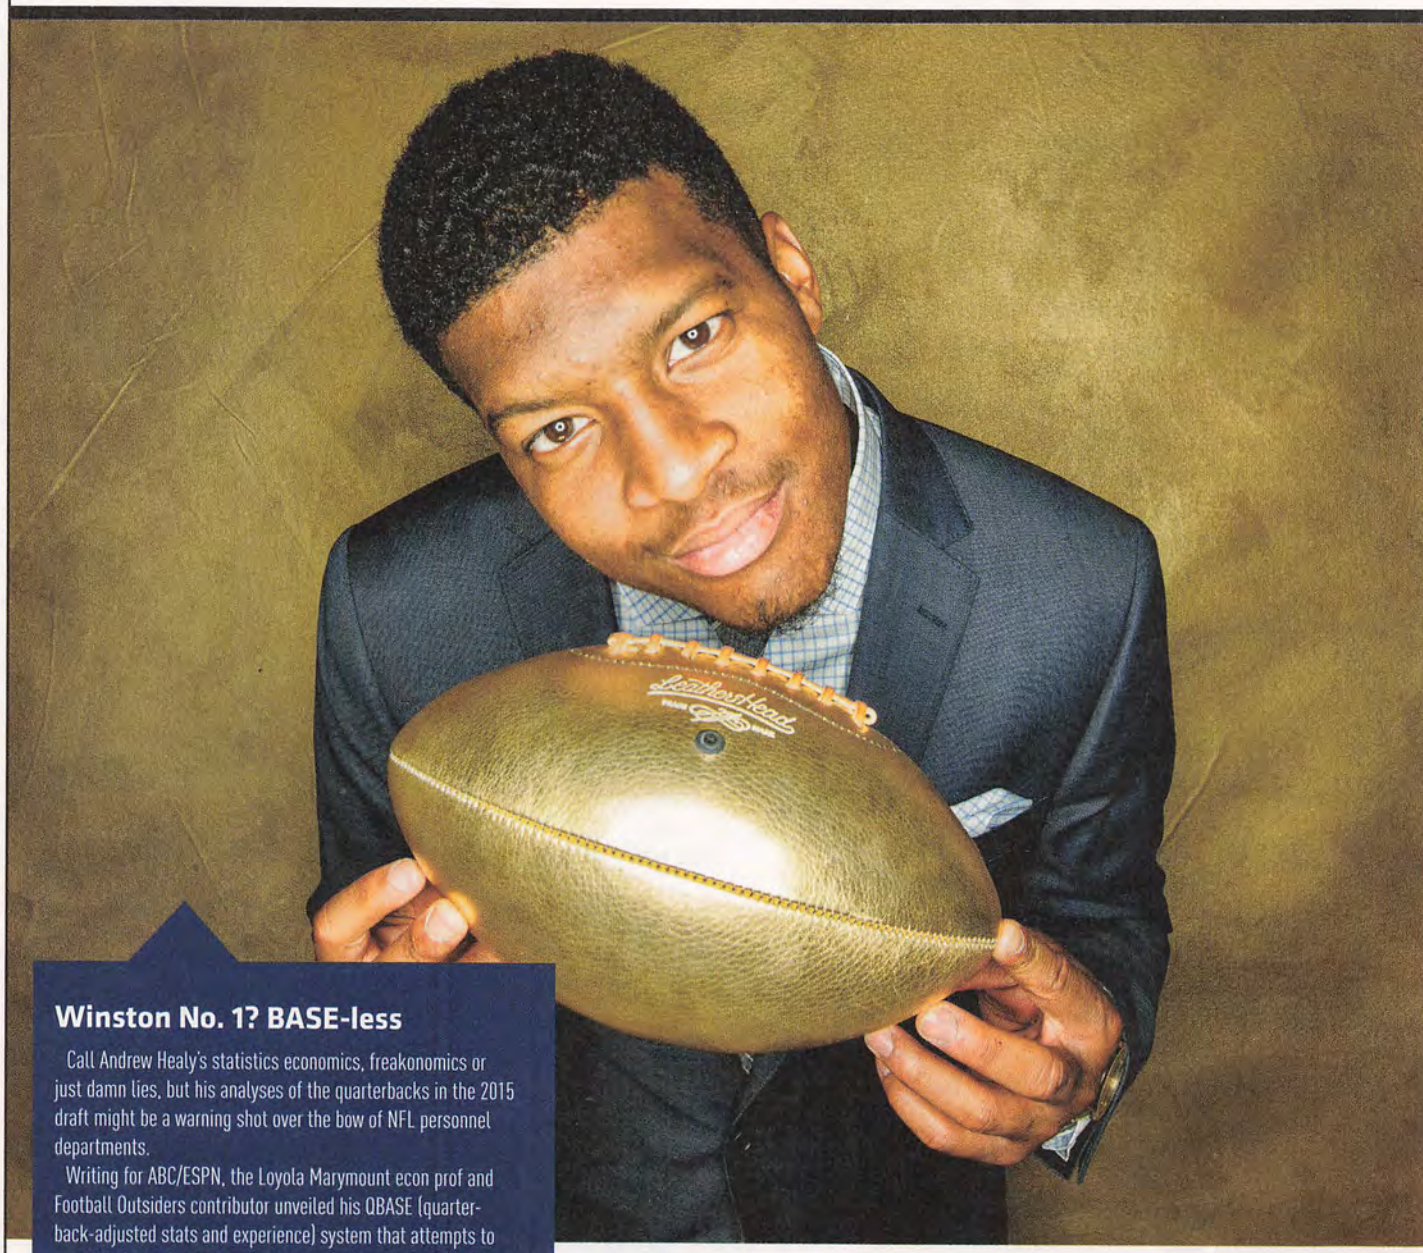
JAN. 18 Russell Wilson targets Jermaine Kearse six times in the NFC Championship Game, the first four of which are intercepted, the fifth falling incomplete and the last resulting in a TD to win the game in OT.

JAN. 18 For the eighth consecutive time (including the last four in which the winning team trailed in the fourth quarter), the NFC title contest is decided by seven or fewer points.

JAN. 29 The LOWEST price of a Super Bowl ticket on the NFL ticket exchange website, three days before the game, is $10,375.

JAN. 30 New Buffalo coach Rex Ryan, whose arm is tattooed with his wife wearing a Jets jersey, has her shirt re-inked from green to blue.

FEB. 1 Russell Wilson's late interception to hand New England the Super Bowl title is the first thrown by a quarterback from the opponent's 1-yard line all season.



Winston No. 1? BASE-less

Call Andrew Healy's statistics economics, freakonomics or just damn lies, but his analyses of the quarterbacks in the 2015 draft might be a warning shot over the bow of NFL personnel departments.

Writing for ABC/ESPN, the Loyola Marymount econ prof and Football Outsiders contributor unveiled his QBASE (quarterback-adjusted stats and experience) system that attempts to quantify the probabilities of pro success for college QBs. The byzantine mathematical mashup takes into account such factors as the strength of defenses faced and the quality of his teammates, then conducts 50,000 simulations to estimate what his performance will look like three to five years after he's drafted. The biggest casualty of the calculus? Jameis Winston.

"Even ignoring his off-field concerns," wrote Healy bluntly, "the odds are against Winston ever becoming an elite quarterback." It's even worse than that. The author proceeded to consign the No. 1 overall pick to the same Bustville zip code as Tim Couch and David Carr, cautioning that "those same warning signs apply."

Conversely, Marcus Mariota was a darling of the data. The No. 2 selection received the highest QBASE projection of the past four drafts, and the seventh-best since 1995, behind guys named Rivers, Palmer, McNabb, Wilson, Griffin III and Manning.

The probabilities of the fates of the six quarterbacks Healy are assessed in the chart to the right:

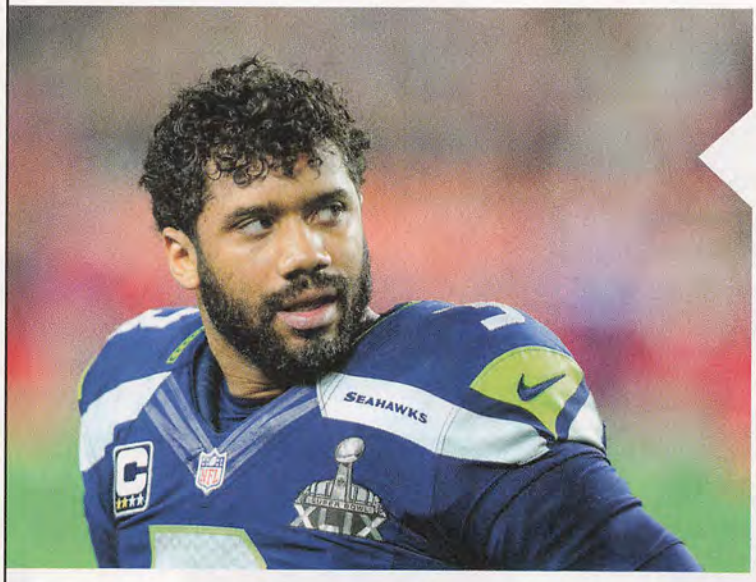
15 THINGS TO WATCH IN 2015

by Charean Williams



1. SEAHAWKS' RECOVERY

The Seahawks spent the entire offseason picking up the pieces from the ill-fated, goal-line play in Super Bowl XLIX. It might take more than duct tape and Super Glue to put the team's mojo back together. Coach Pete Carroll took responsibility for the second-down play call from the 1-yard line that resulted in a Russell Wilson interception with 20 seconds left.

The call now arguably ranks as the most second-guessed in NFL history, with even running back Marshawn Lynch questioning why the Seahawks chose not to run the football. Conspiracy theorists, including some Seahawks players, wondered whether the Seahawks were positioning Wilson to play the part of hero instead of Lynch.

Carroll and his staff will have to regain the trust of the locker room before they begin a quest to become the first team to reach three Super Bowls in a row since the Buffalo Bills (1991-93).

2. WATT THE MVP

The chants began in NRG Stadium at midseason: "M-V-P!" And Texans defensive end J.J. Watt became a serious contender for the award after the Texans finished 9–7, a seven-win improvement over 2013. Watt had 27 tackles, 11 sacks, 20 hits on the quarterback, a touchdown (while playing tight end) and a safety in the final five games when Houston went 4–1. He finished with 20.5 sacks to become the first player with at least 20 sacks in two different seasons.

Although Packers quarterback Aaron Rodgers won the award with 31 of the 50 votes, Watt became the first defensive player this century to garner more than three votes; he finished second with 13 votes.

Watt already owns two Defensive Player of the Year awards and should match Lawrence Taylor with three. But Watt stands a decent chance of becoming only the third defensive player ever to win MVP honors, joining Taylor (1986) and Alan Page (1971).

3. COLTS' NEXT STEP

The Colts went 11–5 and lost in the wild-card round in 2012. They went 11–5 in 2013 and won a wild-card playoff game. They took another step last year, going 11–5 and winning not only a wild-card game but also reaching the AFC Championship Game with a road victory over the Broncos in a divisional game.

Indianapolis got older in the offseason, adding running back Frank Gore (32), receiver Andre Johnson (33), linebacker Trent Cole (32) and offensive lineman Todd Herremans (32). Chuck Pagano insists that the Colts also got better. But the coach enters 2015 as a lame duck. Is it Super Bowl or bust for him?

Wilson: AP; Watt: Harrison McClary/Athlon Sports; Brady: Tom DiPace; Suh: Tami Chappell

4. CUTLER'S LAST STAND?

The Bears' new braintrust — general manager Ryan Pace, coach John Fox and offensive coordinator Adam Gase — has no ties to Jay Cutler. They have not given the quarterback a vote of confidence, either. Cutler's contract, which has a salary-cap hit of $16.5 million this season, offered them no choice but to ride with him this season.

Cutler, 32, has earned a reputation as a "coach killer." He has played for three other head coaches besides Fox, and Gase becomes his sixth offensive coordinator. Cutler, the 11th overall pick in 2006, barely has a winning record in his nine-year career at 61–58. He has only one playoff appearance and only one postseason victory, and even that 2010 season ended in controversy.

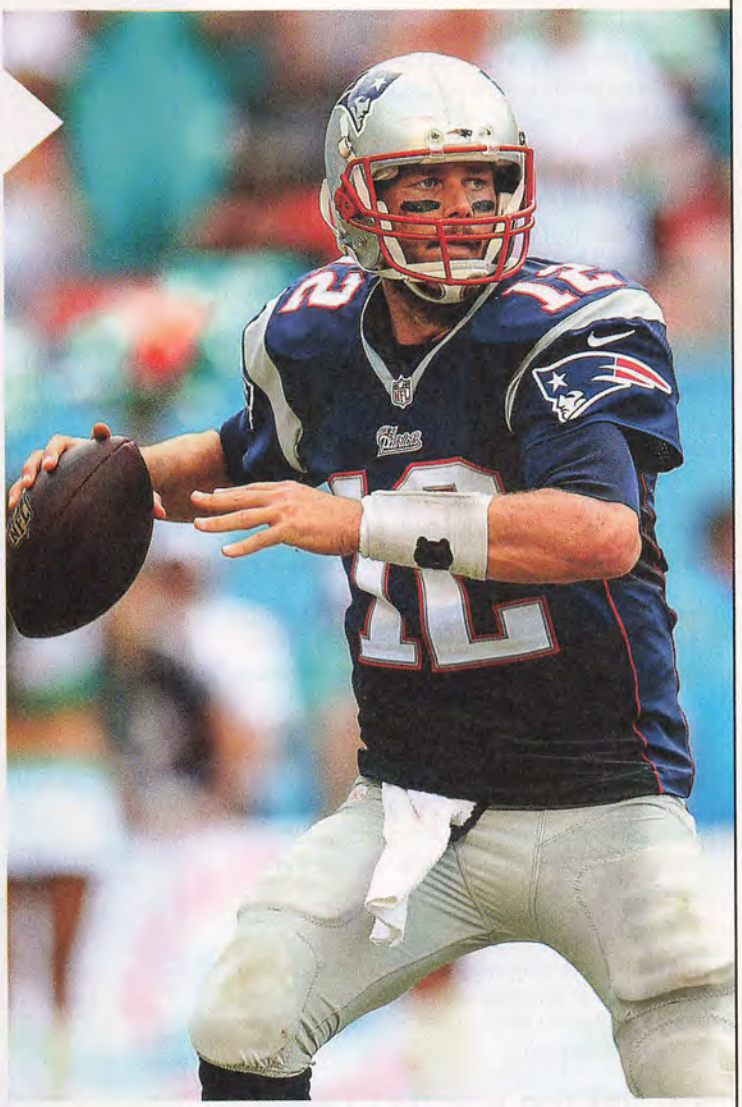
That's why Cutler's seventh season in Chicago might well be his last.

5. RING-BEARER BRADY

Tom Brady joined Joe Montana and Terry Bradshaw as the only quarterbacks ever to win four Super Bowls. Only Hall of Fame defensive lineman Charles Haley has more, with five.

But Brady's titles have not come without controversy. Haley stands among those to call out Brady after Deflategate, tabbing Brady's championships as "tainted." In the Spygate scandal, the NFL penalized coach Bill Belichick and the Patriots for video-taping the Jets' sideline defensive signals.

Brady, who turns 38 in August, has a record 21 playoff wins and plans to play into his 40s. No matter how many titles he wins or how many seasons he plays, Brady's Hall of Fame career likely ends with debate about his legacy.



6. 49ERS' MAKEOVER

The signs of unrest were there last offseason. After a third consecutive trip to the NFC Championship Game, it became glaringly obvious that a split was coming between Jim Harbaugh and the 49ers after the 2014 season. But who could have predicted all the other changes that have occurred since Harbaugh left for the University of Michigan?

Their inside linebackers surprised everyone by retiring. Their starting cornerbacks left in free agency. Frank Gore and Michael Crabtree, key weapons in the offense, found new homes, too. The 49ers released Ray McDonald and Jonathan Martin.

Torrey Smith and Reggie Bush are among the players added in the team's makeover as new offensive coordinator Geep Chryst tries to improve on a unit that ranked 30th in passing and 25th in scoring. Thus begins a new era of 49ers football.

7. SUH'S IMPACT

The Dolphins made the biggest noise in free agency, nabbing Ndamukong Suh with a record-breaking deal. The Pro Bowl defensive tackle signed a six-year, $114 million contract that guarantees him $60 million in the first three years. He joins a defensive line that includes defensive ends Cameron Wake and Olivier Vernon, who have combined for 56.5 sacks the past three seasons.

Suh, 28, has 239 tackles and 36 sacks the past five seasons, leading all NFL defensive tackles. He also has 35 penalties in his career, including seven last season, which leads all defensive tackles.

He should have an instant impact on a defense that ranked 12th overall, including 24th against the run.

8. BRADFORD'S HEALTH

Sam Bradford considered retiring after tearing the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee for the second time in nine months. He has played only seven games the past two seasons, while making $23 million with the Rams.

But Bradford, the No. 1 overall pick in 2010, gets a fresh start in Philadelphia after the Eagles swapped Nick Foles and draft picks for Bradford. The Eagles are hoping Bradford stays healthy, though they have options behind him.

Bradford, 27, has an 18–30–1 record with a 58.6 completion percentage, 11,065 passing yards, 59 touchdowns and 38 interceptions. The move to Chip Kelly's offense might be just what Bradford needs. If he can stay healthy ....

9. MANZIEL'S WILD RIDE

Johnny Manziel has earned nicknames other than Johnny Football since arriving in the NFL. He slipped to No. 22 on draft day and failed to beat out Brian Hoyer until late in the year. Manziel then went 0–2, with a 51.4 completion percentage, 175 passing yards, no touchdowns, two interceptions and a 42.0 passer rating before injuring his hamstring.

He missed a rehab session on his hamstring the final week of the season, prompting questions about his work ethic and commitment to the game.

Manziel voluntarily entered substance-abuse rehab during the offseason, spending 10 weeks trying to get things right. Now the questions become: Can he repair the damage in the locker room, win the starting job and succeed as an NFL quarterback?

10. RICE'S SECOND CHANCE?

Greg Hardy signed with the Cowboys. Ray McDonald signed with the Bears. But Ray Rice can't find work.

A judge convicted Hardy of domestic abuse, but he walked when charges were dropped because his accuser failed to appear in court for his appeal. McDonald was cleared of domestic violence accusations, but the 49ers released him in December after he was investigated for sexual assault. Rice missed last season after striking his then-fiancée unconscious in an elevator during the 2014 offseason.

The league reinstated Rice in December, but he has yet to convince anyone to take a chance on him. Rice, 28, has 6,180 rushing yards, a 4.3 yards per carry average and 37 total touchdowns in six seasons. But he had a career-low 3.1 yards per carry average in 2013, his last season, when he gained only 660 yards with four touchdowns on the ground.

11. RYAN'S UPSTATE MOVE

Rex Ryan's first order of business after leaving the Jets and joining the Bills was changing the color of his tattoo from green to blue. Bills fans were rejuvenated by the hiring of Ryan and the team's offseason moves, giving them thoughts of a playoff berth for the first time in 16 years.

The Bills look similar defensively after re-signing Jerry Hughes, returning the biggest names to a unit that finished fourth in yards allowed and led the league with 54 sacks. The offense, though, has a new look after trades for quarterback Matt Cassel and running back LeSean McCoy and the signings of tight end Charles Clay and wide receiver Percy Harvin.

All of it has turned the Bills into a popular playoff pick.

12. RG3'S FUTURE

The Redskins gave up a king's ransom to get Robert Griffin III with the second overall pick in 2012. It took only two years for Griffin to lose his status as "franchise quarterback," and he could end up elsewhere next season. The Redskins picked up Griffin's option for 2016 at $16.2 million, but they still could rescind it if he stays healthy. Therein lies the problem....

Griffin never has played a full season injury-free, and twice, when healthy, he has been benched. He showed potential his rookie season, earning Offensive Rookie of the Year honors after completing 65.6 percent of his passes for 3,200 yards with 20 touchdowns, five interceptions and a 102.4 passer rating. His career, though, has gone downhill since, and he enters 2015 with a tenuous hold on the team's starting quarterback job.

13. NFL'S RETURN TO L.A.

The Rams, Chargers and Raiders all are prime candidates to move to Los Angeles next year. The nation's second-largest city hasn't had an NFL team to call its own since 1994 when the Rams relocated to St. Louis and the Raiders returned to Oakland. Now, the Rams and Raiders have an interest in returning to L.A.

The NFL owners annual spring meetings included L.A.-area stadium proposals, with league executives expressing confidence professional football is on the verge of returning to L.A. Rams owner Stan Kroenke owns 60 acres in Inglewood, Calif., and the Raiders and Chargers have a joint proposal for a privately financed $1.7 billion stadium they would share in Carson, Calif.

Los Angeles is the favorite to land the NFL Draft in 2016 and would be a future Super Bowl and possibly Pro Bowl host with a new billion-dollar stadium.

14. PETERSON'S FRESH START

Adrian Peterson played one game for Minnesota last season. Will it be his last time in a Vikings uniform? The running back requested a new start elsewhere after being reinstated to the NFL on April 16. The Vikings continue to insist that Peterson will play for them in 2015, and Peterson, scheduled to make $12.75 million in base salary, likely means more to Minnesota than to another team.

He has six 1,000-yard rushing seasons since the Vikings made him a first-round pick in 2007, including his MVP season of 2012 in which he ran for 2,097 yards. Peterson turned 30 this spring and has 2,054 carries. But with fresh legs and much motivation, he could help Minnesota win its first playoff game since 2009 if he fully commits to the Vikings' cause.

15. BUCS GREAT HOPE

Bucs general manager Jason Licht became enamored with Jameis Winston during the Florida State quarterback's Heisman season. He never dreamed, though, that his team would end up with the No. 1 overall pick in the 2015 draft. For the fifth time, the Bucs have used a first-round choice on a quarterback. The other four didn't work out so well.

In their 39-year history, the Bucs have had 36 starting quarterbacks, including three the past two years. It's why they have had only 10 postseason appearances in their history, and six postseason victories. Winston has given Bucs fans hope yet again that the future will be different.

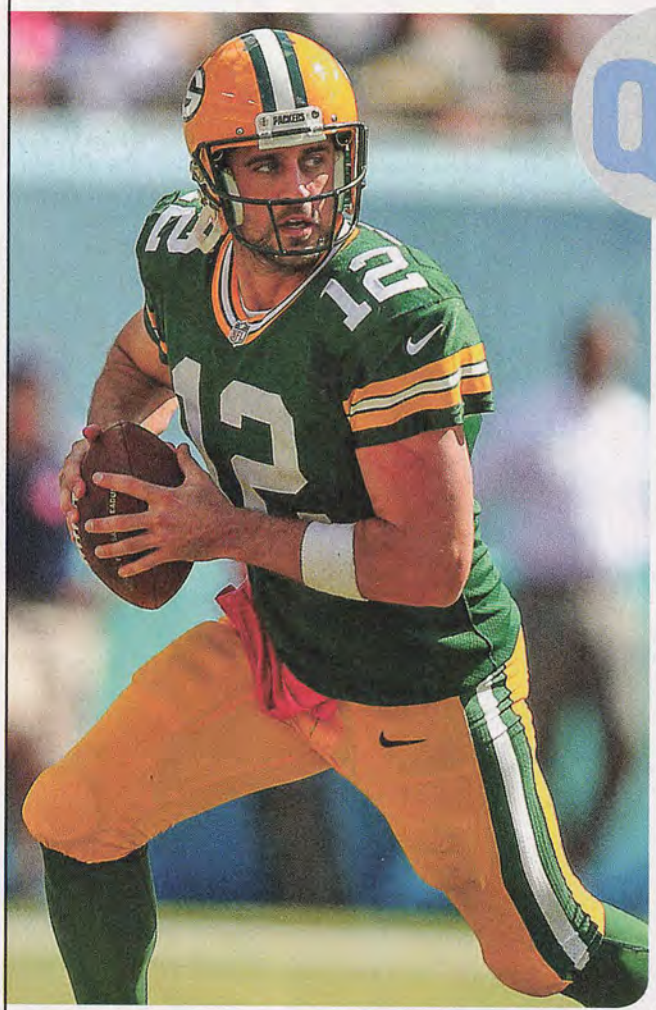
NFL Player Rankings

By Dan Shonka,
Ourlads' NFL Scouting Services



QB

1. AARON RODGERS, GREEN BAY

The consistent and confident signal caller was awarded his second league MVP after he completed 341-of-520 passes for 4,381 yards and 38 touchdowns. He threw only five interceptions and hit 65.6 percent of his throws.

2. TOM BRADY, NEW ENGLAND

Joined Joe Montana and Terry Bradshaw as the only QBs in NFL history to win four Super Bowls. Brady may now have passed Montana, his boyhood idol, as the greatest QB to play the game.

3. DREW BREES, NEW ORLEANS

There was no drop-off in Brees' performance in 2014 — in fact, he delivered one of the best statistical seasons of his career. He continues to be an outstanding ball handler in play action and is one of the most accurate passers in NFL history.

4. BEN ROETHLISBERGER, PITTSBURGH

Signed a new contract in 2015, confirming the Steelers' faith that he is playing at an elite level. His career 7.9 yards-per-attempt average is tied for sixth in NFL history.

5. ANDREW LUCK, INDIANAPOLIS

In his third season, the former Stanford Cardinal threw for 4,761 yards and 40 TDs. The big righthander processes information quickly and is a respected team leader.

6. TONY ROMO, DALLAS

Heading into his 13th year as a pro, Romo time and again has demonstrated the athletic ability to elude the rush, see the open receiver and hit him for a big play.

7. PHILIP RIVERS, SAN DIEGO

The five-time Pro Bowler is back in San Diego after some speculated he would be traded to the Titans. Few field generals sense the rush and step up and away from pressure as effectively as Rivers.

8. PEYTON MANNING, DENVER

Age and time may well be the only opponents that the five-time MVP will not be able to defeat in his quest for another Super Bowl win. The 17-year veteran has 14 Pro Bowl appearances and is still one of the league's undisputed superstars.

9. RUSSELL WILSON, SEATTLE

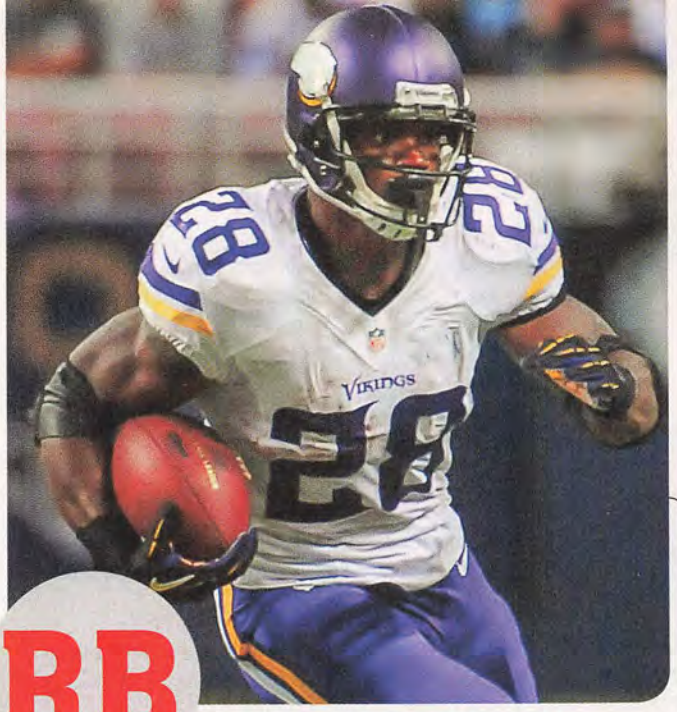
The youngest QB to win a Super Bowl, Wilson had a banner 2014 season, throwing for 3,475 yards, rushing for 849 and accounting for 26 touchdowns.

10. ELI MANNING, N.Y. GIANTS

The 34-year-old concluded last season with a career-best 63.1 completion percentage and threw for 30 touchdowns and 14 interceptions in the Giants' version of the West Coast offense.

11. Matt Ryan, Atlanta
12. Joe Flacco, Baltimore
13. Cam Newton, Carolina
14. Matthew Stafford, Detroit
15. Andy Dalton, Cincinnati
16. Colin Kaepernick, San Francisco
17. Ryan Tannehill, Miami
18. Alex Smith, Kansas City
19. Carson Palmer, Arizona
20. Jay Cutler, Chicago
21. Geno Smith, N.Y. Jets
22. Blake Bortles, Jacksonville
23. Teddy Bridgewater, Minnesota
24. Ryan Fitzpatrick, N.Y. Jets
25. Mark Sanchez, Philadelphia
26. Nick Foles, St. Louis
27. Mike Glennon, Tampa Bay
28. Zach Mettenberger, Tennessee
29. Matt Cassel, Buffalo
30. Derek Carr, Oakland

Rodgers: Tom DiPace; Peterson: AP



RB

1. ADRIAN PETERSON, MINNESOTA

Peterson was placed on the commissioner's exempt list and then suspended indefinitely last November after his much publicized off-the-field issues. He's back now and is still under contract with the Vikings. Peterson is poised for a big 2015 season.

2. MARSHAWN LYNCH, SEATTLE

Banged out 1,306 yards, fifth best in the league, and earned a new contract after leading the Seahawks to their second consecutive Super Bowl. The extra-effort runner cuts without the loss of speed.

3. LE'VEON BELL, PITTSBURGH

The second-year pro slashed his way to 1,361 yards and eight TDs on the ground in 2014. In addition, he had no fumbles in 373 total touches. Bell likely will sit out the first three games this fall due to a marijuana arrest.

4. DEMARCO MURRAY, PHILADELPHIA

Led the NFL in rushing with 1,845 yards, averaging 115.3 yards per game and 4.7 yards per carry for Dallas. A good fit for the Eagles' offense with his quick reactions, vision and the ability to split a crease with good body lean.

5. LESEAN MCCOY, BUFFALO

Was traded to Buffalo after jitterbugging his way to 1,319 yards for the Eagles in 2014. The Bills are gambling that McCoy will return to his days of being a north/south runner.

6. JAMAAL CHARLES, KANSAS CITY

Passed former Chiefs great Priest Holmes as the all-time leading rusher in team history despite battling injuries in 2014. He rushed for 1,033 yards, the fifth time he collected more than a 1,000 yards in a season.

7. ARIAN FOSTER, HOUSTON

Since 2010, he has rushed for 6,052 yards and 50 touchdowns. In the same time frame, he has caught 219 passes for 1,948 yards and 12 TDs. Foster is a downhill power runner with good vision and cutback ability.

8. EDDIE LACY, GREEN BAY

He followed his successful rookie season with a 1,139-yard rushing effort in 2014. The former Alabama star improved his route running and snatched 42 passes for 427 yards, averaging 10.2 yards per reception.

9. MATT FORTE, CHICAGO

Forte broke Larry Centers' record for receptions by a running back by catching 102 passes in 2014. He also rushed for 1,038 yards, the fifth time in seven years he joined the 1,000-yard club.

10. FRANK GORE, INDIANAPOLIS

Signed as an unrestricted free agent by Indianapolis, leaving the 49ers as their all-time leading rusher with 11,073 yards. The ageless warrior brings a dedication and work ethic to a team seeking to upgrade its running attack.

11. Jeremy Hill, Cincinnati
12. Justin Forsett, Baltimore
13. Mark Ingram, New Orleans
14. Lamar Miller, Miami
15. Joique Bell, Detroit
16. Alfred Morris, Washington
17. Chris Ivory, N.Y. Jets
18. Tre Mason, St. Louis
19. Fred Jackson, Buffalo
20. Darren Sproles, Philadelphia
21. C.J. Anderson, Denver
22. Jacquizz Rodgers, Chicago
23. Giovani Bernard, Cincinnati
24. Rashad Jennings, N.Y. Giants
25. Andre Williams, N.Y. Giants
26. Jonathan Stewart, Carolina
27. Steven Jackson, Free Agent
28. Pierre Thomas, Free Agent
29. Branden Oliver, San Diego
30. Ahmad Bradshaw, Free Agent

FB

1. JOHN KUHN, GREEN BAY

The pride of Shippensburg University was an All-Pro selection in 2014. The old-school battering ram relishes contact and special teams play.

2. MARCEL REECE, OAKLAND

Brings a complete tool box of block, run and catch to the table. As a pass receiver with rare speed to run away from defenders, he is an explosive check-down option for Derek Carr.

3. ANTHONY SHERMAN, KANSAS CITY

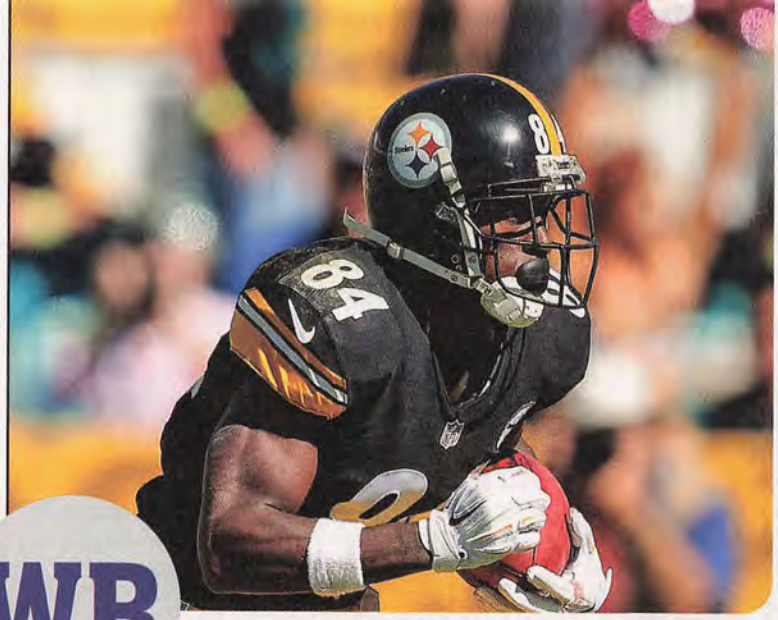
A productive role player in the Chiefs' West Coast offense as a blocker first and occasional receiver. In addition, he is one of the league's top special teams players.

4. BRUCE MILLER, SAN FRANCISCO

Is the most versatile member of the 49ers as a lead blocker, sometime receiver and whirling dervish special teams player. He makes an impact drawing blocks when he doesn't make the tackle himself.

5. HENRY HYNOSKI, N.Y. GIANTS

An H-back-type who blocks well on the run. Good size to run over inside linebackers or kick out penetration. Contributes on all special teams.



WR

1. ANTONIO BROWN, PITTSBURGH
Was voted All-Pro after setting a Steelers single-season record with 1,698 yards and 129 receptions. Brown is dangerous in space with his vision, quickness, and elusiveness.

2. DEMARYIUS THOMAS, DENVER
The big, explosive receiver has the strength to beat bump coverage and the burst to get up the field and separate. Also has the size to run all the inside routes.

3. DEZ BRYANT, DALLAS
Was voted first-team All-Pro and is a big play waiting to happen. The mercurial receiver averaged 15.0 yards per catch and 82.5 yards per game. Productive with 88 catches, 1,320 yards and a league-high 16 TD receptions.

4. CALVIN JOHNSON, DETROIT
For the sixth time in the last seven seasons, Megatron caught at least 70 passes and had at least 1,000 yards receiving.

5. JORDY NELSON, GREEN BAY
Nelson has soft, suction-cup-type hands. The competitive receiver is particularly productive between the hash marks. Has topped 1,000 yards in three of the last four seasons.

6. JULIO JONES, ATLANTA
After missing 11 games in 2013 with injuries, the ex-Alabama receiver reminded opponents they must account for him.

7. ODELL BECKHAM JR., N.Y. GIANTS
The reigning AP Offensive Rookie of the Year started out slowly due to injuries, but more than got up to speed from Weeks 5 through 16, catching 91 balls for 1,305 yards and 12 touchdowns.

8. EMMANUEL SANDERS, DENVER
Highly productive in the Broncos' time-share offense. The hand catcher runs crisp and sharp routes. Excels tracking and adjusting to Peyton Manning's deep passes.

9. RANDALL COBB, GREEN BAY
Re-signed in the offseason with the Packers after catching 91 passes for 1,287 yards and 12 TDs in 2014. He played in only six games the previous year but made his contract year count.

10. T.Y. HILTON, INDIANAPOLIS
Became the sixth player in NFL history to record 10 100-yard receiving games in the first two seasons of a career. Hilton's 2014 numbers: 82 receptions, 1,345 yards, 16.4 yards per catch and seven TDs.

11. A.J. Green, Cincinnati
12. Alshon Jeffery, Chicago
13. DeAndre Hopkins, Houston
14. Mike Evans, Tampa Bay
15. Jeremy Maclin, Kansas City
16. Kelvin Benjamin, Carolina
17. Julian Edelman, New England
18. Golden Tate, Detroit
19. Andre Johnson, Indianapolis
20. Rueben Randle, N.Y. Giants
21. Jarvis Landry, Miami
22. Anquan Boldin, San Francisco
23. Doug Baldwin, Seattle
24. Keenan Allen, San Diego
25. Eric Decker, N.Y. Jets
26. Vincent Jackson, Tampa Bay
27. Sammy Watkins, Buffalo
28. Brandon Marshall, N.Y. Jets
29. Larry Fitzgerald, Arizona
30. Steve Smith, Baltimore

TE

1. ROB GRONKOWSKI, NEW ENGLAND
The huge red-zone target with long arms made it through the 2014 season injury-free. He corralled 82 passes for 1,124 yards, averaging 13.7 yards per catch, and scored 12 times.

2. JIMMY GRAHAM, SEATTLE
Fought through a shoulder injury in 2014 but still came up with 85 catches good for 889 yards and 10 touchdowns. He will have a new role in Seattle as a blocker, as well as a featured receiver.

3. JASON WITTEN, DALLAS
Has caught 943 passes in his 12-year career, good for 10,502 yards and 57 touchdowns. He also has played in 187 straight games.

4. GREG OLSEN, CAROLINA
Was second only to Gronkowski in tight end receiving yards with 1,008. Has played in 126 consecutive games, the second-longest streak in the NFL among active tight ends.

5. MARTELLUS BENNETT, CHICAGO
Led all tight ends with 90 catches, averaging just over a first down per reception at 10.2 yards. He broke Hall of Famer Mike Ditka's single-season record for most catches by a Bears tight end.

6. TRAVIS KELCE, KANSAS CITY
Showed good run-after-catch ability, gaining 20 yards or more on 15 of his 67 catches. For a big man, he has the speed to get vertical down the field.

7. DWAYNE ALLEN, INDIANAPOLIS
Allen and teammate Coby Fleener became the first tight end duo on the same team to each record eight touchdowns in a season. He's a versatile athlete who can play fullback, wide receiver and in the slot.

8. ZACH ERTZ, PHILADELPHIA
A dependable pass catcher who is smart and athletic. Effective blocker when on the move. Productive with 58 catches for 702 yards.

9. VIRGIL GREEN, DENVER
A natural hand catcher with speed. Demonstrated good-enough ball skills and athletic ability that the Broncos decided to let Julius Thomas go in free agency.

10. JULIUS THOMAS, JACKSONVILLE
Signed with Jacksonville as an unrestricted free agent. Became the first tight end in NFL history to catch at least 12 touchdown passes in consecutive seasons.

11. Antonio Gates, San Diego
12. Delanie Walker, Tennessee
13. Heath Miller, Pittsburgh
14. Charles Clay, Buffalo
15. Jared Cook, St. Louis
16. Owen Daniels, Denver
17. Coby Fleener, Indianapolis
18. Jermaine Gresham, Free Agent
19. Vernon Davis, San Francisco
20. Larry Donnell, N.Y. Giants

Tom DiPace

G

1. MARSHAL YANDA, BALTIMORE
Uses his hands well to control the defender. He is the total package of run blocker, pass protector, football instincts, functional strength and hell-bent-for-leather finisher.

2. ZACK MARTIN, DALLAS
Made the transition from college tackle to pro guard. Under the tutelage of line coach Bill Callahan (now with the Redskins), Martin took his blue-collar work ethic and talent to another level.

3. T.J. LANG, GREEN BAY
An intense and competitive blocker who plays square with balance and leverage. Aggressive off the snap and finishes his target with good head position and leg drive.

4. EVAN MATHIS, PHILADELPHIA
Has a reputation as a consistent competitor who battles hard every play. He is an efficient position blocker with good first-step quickness.

5. KELECHI OSEMELE, BALTIMORE
He has elevated his game under line coach Juan Castillo. The wide-bodied road grader has the physical tools to lock up a defensive tackle.

6. MIKE IUPATI, ARIZONA
A powerful man with a wide, athletic body, he plays with a good base and competitive streak. Controls the defender with strong hands and an explosive punch.

7. JOEL BITONIO, CLEVELAND
Uses his hands to seal the inside gap from a defender's penetration. Physical and strong on down blocks.

8. BRANDON BROOKS, HOUSTON
Has a thick and powerful body and can manhandle a pass rusher if he maintains his knee bend and leverage.

9. RONALD LEARY, DALLAS
The former undrafted free agent plays with a good power base to position and wall off a defender in the run game.

10. JOHN GRECO, CLEVELAND
A smart and instinctive player who is very technique-conscious. Keeps his hands inside the frame and controls his target.

11. Josh Sitton, Green Bay
12. Kevin Zeitler, Cincinnati
13. Brandon Linder, Jacksonville
14. Kyle Long, Chicago
15. Orlando Franklin, San Diego
16. Andrew Norwell, Carolina
17. Clint Boling, Cincinnati
18. Chance Warmack, Tennessee
19. Larry Warford, Detroit
20. David DeCastro, Pittsburgh

C

1. NICK MANGOLD, N.Y. JETS
The durable and dependable pivot has an explosive punch that stuns a defender. Plays with good technique and strong hands.

2. TRAVIS FREDERICK, DALLAS
A power player who gets push in the run game. Has demonstrated the size and strength to neutralize a nose tackle or drive down a gap defender.

3. ALEX MACK, CLEVELAND
The leader of the Browns' offensive line was well on his way to an All-Pro selection when he went down with a broken fibula in October.

4. RODNEY HUDSON, OAKLAND
He is undersized by NFL standards but plays with quickness and agility. Especially effective as a zone blocker, getting to the second level where he seals off linebackers and cuts off pursuit.

5. JOHN SULLIVAN, MINNESOTA
Plays with light feet in pass protection yet can anchor versus a power rusher. He has the size, strength, balance and base to control a defensive lineman.

6. JASON KELCE, PHILADELPHIA
A classic zone-blocking center who is athletic with good technique and footwork. Quick to redirect and change direction.

7. MAX UNGER, NEW ORLEANS
A strong drive blocker with nifty feet in the run game. Plays with a solid punch, lockout and foot quickness in pass protection.

8. RYAN KALIL, CAROLINA
He is an intense and sound technician who is physical and aggressive in his play.

9. KORY LICHTENSTEIGER, WASHINGTON
A tough and physical throwback blocker who works to finish his blocks. Plays with quick hands and good technique.

10. MAURKICE POUNCEY, PITTSBURGH
Earned an All-Pro selection in 2014 and is recognized in league circles as an athletic center who plays with attitude and aggression.

11. Chris Myers, Free Agent
12. Jeremy Zuttah, Baltimore
13. Corey Linsley, Green Bay
14. Evan Dietrich-Smith, Tampa Bay
15. Stefen Wisniewski, Jacksonville
16. Bryan Stork, New England
17. Eric Wood, Buffalo
18. Luke Bowanko, Jacksonville
19. Samson Satele, Free Agent
20. Russell Bodine, Cincinnati

T

1. TYRON SMITH, DALLAS
Physically, he has it all with his extra-long arms, huge hands, strength and athletic ability. He seals the play side with good technique and rare lateral quickness. He is equally skilled as a run blocker or pass protector.

2. JOE THOMAS, CLEVELAND
He has an outstanding combination of size, athletic ability and a gritty style of play. Demonstrates explosiveness and power in the run game.

3. JOE STALEY, SAN FRANCISCO
A Pro Bowl talent who is highly competitive and works to finish his blocks with a nasty streak.

4. JASON PETERS, PHILADELPHIA
He has anchored the Eagles' offensive line since being acquired in a trade from Buffalo in 2009.

5. ANDREW WHITWORTH, CINCINNATI
He is heading into his 10th year in the league as a physical tackle who can manhandle defensive ends and tackles with his hand strength.

6. LANE JOHNSON, PHILADELPHIA
An ascending tackle who has started 28 straight games for the Eagles after being drafted in the first round in 2013. A physical and aggressive right tackle.

7. SEBASTIAN VOLLMER, NEW ENGLAND
A native of Germany, Vollmer has become more of a technique player rather than a mauler in the run game.

8. JARED VELDHEER, ARIZONA
Signed as an unrestricted free agent a year ago from Oakland and has been a huge upgrade on the left side of the Cardinals' line.

9. DUANE BROWN, HOUSTON
A natural athlete with long arms and big hands for the left tackle position. Good body control and balance.

10. KELVIN BEACHUM, PITTSBURGH
A good athlete who plays square and has an explosive punch. A top-level technique player who plays with confidence.

11. Donald Penn, Oakland
12. Branden Albert, Miami
13. Anthony Castonzo, Indianapolis
14. Ricky Wagner, Baltimore

DT

1. NDAMUKONG SUH, MIAMI

A new arrival with the Dolphins, Suh has recorded 239 tackles including 36 sacks from the inside at defensive tackle.

2. MARCELL DAREUS, BUFFALO

A Pro Bowl selection after a 10-sack season, Dareus is a long-armed power player who doesn't stay blocked.

3. GERALD McCOY, TAMPA BAY

The five-year veteran has catlike quickness, good agility and body control to work his way through traffic. He excels as a one-gap penetrator.

4. AARON DONALD, ST. LOUIS

The relentless, slippery leverage player has good flexibility to dip and bend. The 2014 AP Defensive Rookie of the Year had nine sacks and 48 total tackles.

5. KYLE WILLIAMS, BUFFALO

He missed 11 games due to injury in 2011, but other than that, he has been a tireless blue-collar worker Bills fans appreciate.

6. JOHNATHAN HANKINS, N.Y. GIANTS

Hankins plays hard inside out to the perimeter and has good lateral quickness and change of direction.

7. KAWANN SHORT, CAROLINA

Playing in front of NFL tackling leader Luke Kuechly, Short absorbs blocks and gets upfield push in the pass game.

8. STEPHEN PAEA, WASHINGTON

With his strength and leverage, Paea is tough to block one-on-one. He gains an advantage with his first-step quickness.

9. TERRANCE KNIGHTON, WASHINGTON

This wide-bodied pocket presser was just what the doctor ordered for Washington to stop the inside running game.

10. JARED ODRICK, JACKSONVILLE

A free-agent signee, Odrick is projected to play inside in a four-man front. He's a disruptive player who gets upfield pressure.

11. Vince Wilfork, Houston
12. Sharrif Floyd, Minnesota
13. Brandon Williams, Baltimore
14. Jay Ratliff, Chicago

DE 3-4

1. J.J. WATT, HOUSTON
A unanimous All-Pro, Watt has never missed a game in his four-year career, recording 51.5 sacks in the past three years.

2. SHELDON RICHARDSON, N.Y. JETS
The 2013 AP NFL Defensive Rookie of the Year built on his first season by registering 67 tackles and eight sacks.

3. MUHAMMAD WILKERSON, N.Y. JETS
Wilkerson has played in 61 games since he was drafted four years ago and has collected 237 career tackles and 24.5 sacks.

4. CALAIS CAMPBELL, ARIZONA
Campbell is a wiry and strong player at the point of attack and has the speed to run a play down from behind.

5. FLETCHER COX, PHILADELPHIA
A battler from snap to whistle, Cox takes good angles in both long and short pursuit and has good use of hands at the point of attack.

6. JUSTIN SMITH, SAN FRANCISCO
It's possible this relentless and tenacious warrior will announce his retirement at some point before the 2015 season begins.

7. CAMERON HEYWARD, PITTSBURGH
An explosive player with innate strength, the fifth-year pro has put together back-to-back solid seasons.

8. HALOTI NGATA, DETROIT
Detroit acquired Ngata, a nine-year veteran and five-time Pro Bowler, this offseason to offset the loss of Ndamukong Suh.

9. MIKE DANIELS, GREEN BAY
One of the top disruptors in the league, Daniels is undersized for a 3-4 defensive end, but he's quick and resourceful in his play.

10. JURRELL CASEY, TENNESSEE
The four-year veteran is a productive, quick and high-effort competitor. Casey refuses to stay blocked and has the burst to close and finish a play.

11. Jason Hatcher, Washington
12. Ray McDonald, Chicago
13. Timmy Jernigan, Baltimore

DE 4-3

1. CAMERON WAKE, MIAMI
The 2014 Pro Bowl selection has the hand strength and leverage to control the blocker and stack the run. Wake finished 2014 with 11.5 sacks and three forced fumbles.

2. MICHAEL BENNETT, SEATTLE
Bennett plays with strength and leverage and sets the edge of the defense with good lateral quickness. He has elevated his total game over the past five years.

3. JUNIOR GALETTE, NEW ORLEANS
The long-armed edge pass rusher has an explosive first step. A good athlete with exceptional change-of-direction ability, Galette has 22 sacks the past two years.

4. EZEKIEL ANSAH, DETROIT
A talented and disruptive high-effort athlete, Ansah controls the blocker with his long arms and big hands. He elevated his overall game his second season.

5. JASON PIERRE-PAUL, N.Y. GIANTS
The speed rusher takes advantage of his long arms and huge hands. He finished the season with 77 tackles and 12.5 sacks.

6. EVERSON GRIFFEN, MINNESOTA
Griffen has outstanding lateral quickness with a relentless burst to the quarterback. An explosive leverage player, Griffen had 12 sacks last season.

7. CHARLES JOHNSON, CAROLINA
A productive pass rusher with the ability to stop the run, Johnson has quick feet with his outside rush or inside charge. Has 52.5 sacks in the last five years.

8. CLIFF AVRIL, SEATTLE
Avril has explosive first-step quickness and uses his long arms to set the edge in the run game. Avril has recorded 13 sacks the past two years.

9. MARIO WILLIAMS, BUFFALO
A Pro Bowl pass rusher who can turn speed to power on a rush. He has sudden first-step quickness and covers a lot of ground quickly.

10. ROBERT QUINN, ST. LOUIS
The 2014 Pro Bowler possesses natural hand, foot and lateral quickness. He refuses to stay blocked and can slip and accelerate off a block.

11. Chris Long, St. Louis

ILB

1. LUKE KUECHLY, CAROLINA

Kuechly is the poster guy for competitive, instinctive and intense linebacker play. Last season, he was selected to his second career Pro Bowl and led the NFL in tackles. He's started all 48 games in his career.

2. DONT'A HIGHTOWER, NEW ENGLAND

Hightower is a physical run stuffer with the strength and ability to shed quickly at the point of attack. Most important, he made the key tackle on Marshawn Lynch at the 1-yard line in the Super Bowl.

3. JAMIE COLLINS, NEW ENGLAND

An ascending player who is getting more efficient every year, Collins has long arms and big hands, which help him shed blocks with his combination of power and speed.

4. BOBBY WAGNER, SEATTLE

A Pro Bowl performer, Wagner has top-level instincts and good overall technique. He is quick to read and react, has good range and takes productive angles in pursuit.

5. SEAN LEE, DALLAS

Lee is a competitor who doesn't get fooled. He's versatile enough to play inside or outside in the 4-3, but the Cowboys will start him on the outside in hopes of keeping him healthy and on the field.

6. KIKO ALONSO, PHILADELPHIA

Like Lee, Alonso missed last season due to a torn ACL. That didn't stop Philadelphia from acquiring the former Oregon Duck for LeSean McCoy. In 2013, Alonso was second in the AP NFL Defensive Rookie of the Year voting.

7. BRIAN CUSHING, HOUSTON

When healthy, Cushing is an All-Pro-caliber player, gaining such honors in 2009 and 2011. In 2014 — his first season in the last three in which he played more than seven games — Cushing started 14 games and totaled 72 tackles.

8. MYCHAL KENDRICKS, PHILADELPHIA

Despite missing four games with a calf injury last season, Kendricks is averaging 88 tackles per season. The instinctive playmaker was in on 75 tackles, one sack and three forced fumbles last season.

9. DARYL SMITH, BALTIMORE

A free-agent steal for the Ravens in 2013, Smith is known for consistent, instinctive and intense play. For the past two years the sideline-to-sideline performer has averaged more than 125 tackles per season.

10. KARLOS DANSBY, CLEVELAND

The 11-year veteran is recognized league-wide as an instinctive and productive defensive leader. He is one of only two players heading into the 2015 season with at least 30 career sacks and 10 career interceptions.

11. Brandon Marshall, Denver
12. Preston Brown, Buffalo

OLB 3-4

1. JUSTIN HOUSTON, KANSAS CITY

A first-team All-Pro in 2014, Houston has 48.5 sacks in his four-year career. Only J.J. Watt has disrupted more dropbacks since 2011.

2. VON MILLER, DENVER

A nightmare for edge-blocking tackles, tight ends and backs, Miller has a knack and desire to excel working to the quarterback. In his four-year career he has 49 sacks, including 14 last season.

3. TERRELL SUGGS, BALTIMORE

The Ravens' all-time leader in sacks added 12 more in 2014. He's an explosive athlete who has had a pattern of yearly production from college through pro football.

4. ELVIS DUMERVIL, BALTIMORE

A fast-twitch athlete who works through blocks, Dumervil had 17 sacks in his 2014 All-Pro season. The prolific edge rusher has 90 sacks between his Denver stint and two years with the Ravens.

5. CLAY MATTHEWS, GREEN BAY

After a temporary move to inside linebacker, Matthews arguably had his best season with the variety of assignments. A five-time Pro Bowl selection.

6. PAUL KRUGER, CLEVELAND

A relentless high-motor defender who recorded 11 sacks in 2014, Kruger has been a productive asset since signing as an unrestricted free agent in 2013. He displays a sudden punch and spin move with an upfield burst.

7. CONNOR BARWIN, PHILADELPHIA

The versatile and athletic edge rusher was in on 64 tackles including 14.5 sacks, tied with Buffalo's Mario Williams for fourth in the league.

8. PERNELL McPHEE, CHICAGO

McPhee had a combined 38 quarterback knockdowns and hurries in 2014.

9. BRANDON GRAHAM, PHILADELPHIA

Last season, Graham recorded 13.5 tackles for a loss, four forced fumbles and 18 QB hurries.

10. RYAN KERRIGAN, WASHINGTON

Kerrigan racked up 13.5 sacks in 2014 and has never missed a start in his four-year pro career. He is consistent and nonstop in his play.

11. Julius Peppers, Green Bay
12. Derrick Morgan, Tennessee
13. Jason Babin, N.Y. Jets
14. James Harrison, Pittsburgh
15. Chandler Jones, New England
16. Tamba Hali, Kansas City
17. Trent Cole, Indianapolis
18. Rob Ninkovich, New England
19. Brooks Reed, Atlanta
20. Whitney Mercilus, Houston

OLB 4-3

1. LAVONTE DAVID, TAMPA BAY

A tackling machine with natural and instinctive ability to recognize and react to run or pass, David was third in the league with 146 tackles.

2. KHALIL MACK, OAKLAND

An athletic linebacker who can dip his shoulder, penetrate into the backfield and pressure the quarterback, Mack started all 16 games as a rookie and had 76 total tackles.

3. DEANDRE LEVY, DETROIT

Levy is an athletic linebacker who can play square, work through traffic and run in space. Only Luke Kuechly had more tackles than Levy's 151 last season.

4. THOMAS DAVIS, CAROLINA

An aggressive and explosive hitter, Davis has worked through three ACL surgeries during his career to become one of the league's best linebackers. He's totaled over 100 tackles for the third year in a row.

5. K.J. WRIGHT, SEATTLE

A productive tackler who is instinctive and physical, Wright is better in a confined area. He's a multi-scheme athlete who totaled 107 tackles in 2014.

6. ANTHONY BARR, MINNESOTA

Barr has a good combination of length and take-off edge speed. He can beat an offensive tackle with athletic ability and double moves. In 12 games as a rookie, Barr registered 70 tackles, four sacks, two forced fumbles and three fumble recoveries.

7. JELANI JENKINS, MIAMI

Jenkins is instinctive with a nose for the ball and has all the tools for a coverage linebacker. He made 110 tackles and forced two fumbles in 14 starts last fall.

8. BRUCE CARTER, TAMPA BAY

Carter is a fluid athlete who can cover a lot of ground. Agile through traffic and with no hold up in pursuit, Carter has the speed to run with backs and tight ends in coverage.

9. NIGEL BRADHAM, BUFFALO

Versatile enough to play any of the positions in any scheme, Bradham is an athletic linebacker who can cover a tight end. He has good closing speed in pursuit. He was in on 104 tackles and defended six passes.

10. DANNY LANSANAH, TAMPA BAY

An overnight success after being in the league off and on since 2008, Lansanah started 11 games in 2014 and recorded 82 tackles and three interceptions, two returned for TDs.

11. Justin Durant, Atlanta
12. Philip Wheeler, San Francisco
13. Vincent Rey, Cincinnati
14. Alec Ogletree, St. Louis

CB

1. DARRELLE REVIS, N.Y. JETS
The All-Pro shutdown corner is back with the Jets on a five-year, $70 million deal after picking up a Super Bowl ring with New England.

2. RICHARD SHERMAN, SEATTLE
The All-Pro selection was the least-targeted cornerback in the NFL last season. One of the most competitive and rangy corners, he challenges every ball in his area.

3. CHRIS HARRIS JR., DENVER
A versatile, skilled outside corner who can also play in the slot or at safety, Harris earned a Pro Bowl invite last season thanks to his standout ball skills.

4. VONTAE DAVIS, INDIANAPOLIS
After a trade from the Dolphins to the Colts, Davis' career as a top coverage corner took off and earned him a Pro Bowl invitation in 2014.

5. PATRICK PETERSON, ARIZONA
After diagnosis and treatment of diabetes, he was back winning his share of one-on-one battles with the league's elite receivers.

6. JOE HADEN, CLEVELAND
Haden is tough in run support and a good open-field tackler. The five-year veteran totaled 73 tackles, 20 passes defended and three interceptions in 2014.

7. SEAN SMITH, KANSAS CITY
His length helps him in press coverage, and he has become more technique conscious. Due to a DUI conviction, Smith likely will be suspended for the first two games.

8. AQIB TALIB, DENVER
Talib earned back-to-back Pro Bowl invitations with New England and Denver, finishing last season with 16 passes defended, four interceptions and two touchdowns.

9. DESMOND TRUFANT, ATLANTA
One of the top young corners in the game, Trufant has good short-area quickness and takes a direct line to the ball with no false steps.

10. ALTERRAUN VERNER, TAMPA BAY
Verner should be a perfect fit in Lovie Smith's Cover 2. He does a good job rerouting receivers with his quick feet and reactions.

11. Rashean Mathis, Detroit
12. Orlando Scandrick, Dallas
13. Corey Graham, Buffalo
14. Byron Maxwell, Philadelphia
15. Antonio Cromartie, N.Y. Jets

29. Lardarius Webb, Baltimore
30. Perrish Cox, Tennessee

S

1. EARL THOMAS, SEATTLE
A defensive leader who has become a perennial All-Pro-caliber player.

2. ERIC WEDDLE, SAN DIEGO
Consistently mentioned with the game's top free safeties, Weddle earned his fifth All-Pro selection in 2014 and is a standout special teams player.

3. KAM CHANCELLOR, SEATTLE
A cornerstone of the Seahawks' defense as the secondary's physical tone-setter, Chancellor played through a torn MCL in the Super Bowl.

4. GLOVER QUIN, DETROIT
A big-time coverage safety who can cover deep or play the nickel, Quin led the NFL with seven interceptions.

5. TASHAUN GIPSON, CLEVELAND
Second in the league with six interceptions, Gipson also defended eight passes and returned one pick for a touchdown.

6. HARRISON SMITH, MINNESOTA
Smith has emerged as one of the best young safeties in the league. The former Golden Domer had 92 tackles and five interceptions.

7. DEVIN McCOURTY, NEW ENGLAND
The corner-turned-safety is one of the league's most dependable players. McCourty is smart and athletic and has unlimited coverage range.

8. ANTOINE BETHEA, SAN FRANCISCO
After finishing with 14 passes defended (including four INTs), Bethea has been an underrated safety with the general public but not the league's receivers.

9. MIKE ADAMS, INDIANAPOLIS
In his first season with the Colts, Adams reached his first career Pro Bowl at age 33. He intercepted five passes and forced two fumbles last season.

10. RESHAD JONES, MIAMI
The big-hitting safety also plays the ball well in the air. He was responsible for 80 tackles and seven passes defended along with three interceptions in 2014.

LEAVING IT ALL BEHIND

San Francisco 49ers linebacker Chris Borland's decision to walk away from football after his rookie season seemed shocking, but he is suddenly not alone in valuing long-term heath above short-term riches and glory. What is going through the minds of players who have made the difficult decision to walk away?

by Brendan Prunty

On the weekend of the NFL Draft, Jack Miller was in Las Vegas.

It was a previously scheduled trip with some college buddies to experience the whole Sin City thing after finishing their senior year at Michigan. There were the usual Vegas trappings, coupled with the added bonus of being in town during one of the most memorable sporting days in recent memory. But there were a few times — actually, more than a few — when Miller found himself in his hotel room, flipping on ESPN or the NFL Network to see what was happening with the draft.

He watched the scroll and saw names of familiar foes throughout the Big Ten. Names of kids he knew from high school games and offseason camps. And of course, three of his Wolverine teammates.

A few years ago, Miller would've pictured this day unfolding differently. He'd be watching with eagerness. He'd be thinking how a year from now, he'd be waiting for his name to be called — waiting to find out which NFL team would be providing his livelihood for the next decade. Instead, Miller was having what he calls his "rare days."

Days where he misses football.

"There are days where it's hard," Miller says, "where I think, 'Boy, I do miss the game.' There's no other way in the world where you can hit somebody at full-speed and not get in trouble for it. Part of that, I have to get used to. But at the end of the day, I know it was the right decision for me. And I'm at peace with it."

Jack Miller is 21 years old. He's in his second month of retirement from the game of football.

His story, though, is becoming far less uncommon. Miller, a 16-game starter at center for Michigan, announced in early March that he would be leaving the team and quitting football before his fifth season with the Wolverines. One reason was that he was burned out from the game. Another was that he was concerned about his own health, largely because of concussions. He was a kid with a potential future in the NFL who decided that continuing to play wasn't worth the risk.

And he's not the only one who has recently made the difficult decision to walk away. Patrick Willis, the San Francisco 49ers All-Pro linebacker, retired in the offseason at the age of 30 after eight seasons. Jason Worilds, the Pittsburgh Steelers linebacker, retired in March at the age of 27 after five seasons — despite being one of the most coveted free agents this offseason. Jake Locker, the Tennessee Titans quarterback and eighth overall pick in the 2011 draft, called it a career after only four seasons at age 26. And Chris Borland, a linebacker and teammate of Willis in San Francisco, retired at the age of 24 after only one season in the NFL.

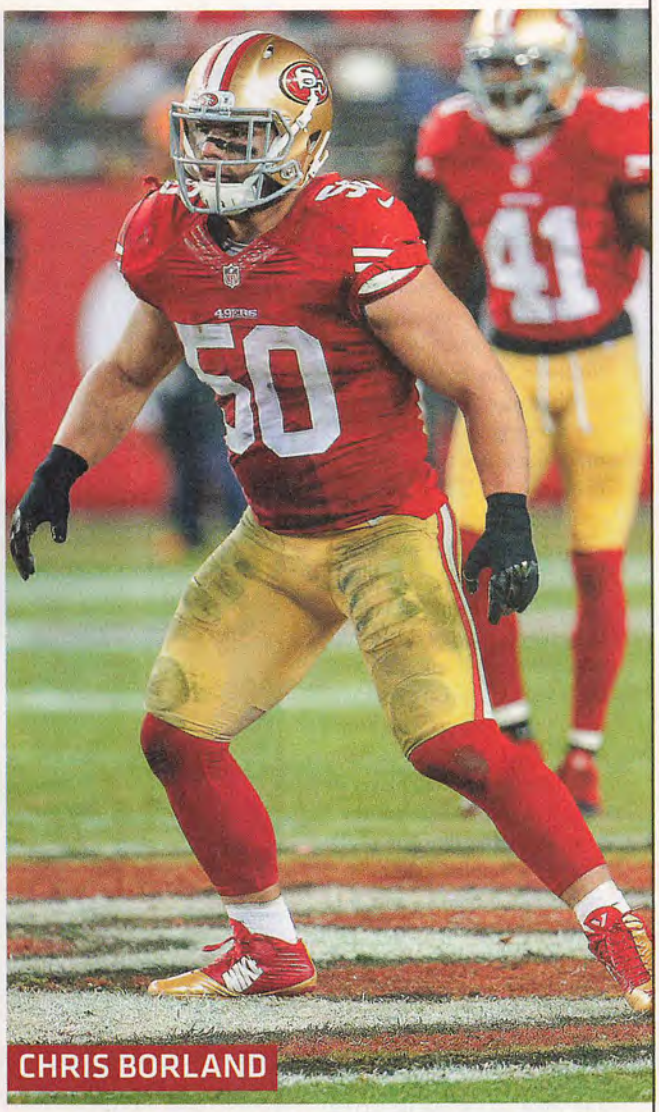
PATRICK WILLIS



CHRIS BORLAND

"I just honestly want to do what's best for my health," Borland told ESPN's "Outside the Lines" in March. "From what I've researched and what I've experienced, I don't think it's worth the risk."

He's not alone.

GETTING OUT TOO LATE?

By the time that Hunter Hillenmeyer decided to retire, there wasn't much football left for him to play. At 29, he'd already maxed out his potential with the Chicago Bears. A fifth-round pick out of Vanderbilt in the 2003 draft, he was selected by the Green Bay Packers and was assigned to the team's practice squad. He was cut by the end of the preseason but resurfaced with the Bears and spent most of his rookie season on special teams.

A year later, he started 11 games at strong-side linebacker. The next season, 12 starts. Pretty soon, he was an invaluable member of a Bears linebacking corps that was the nucleus for the 2006 NFC champion team, which lost to the Indianapolis Colts in Super Bowl XLI.

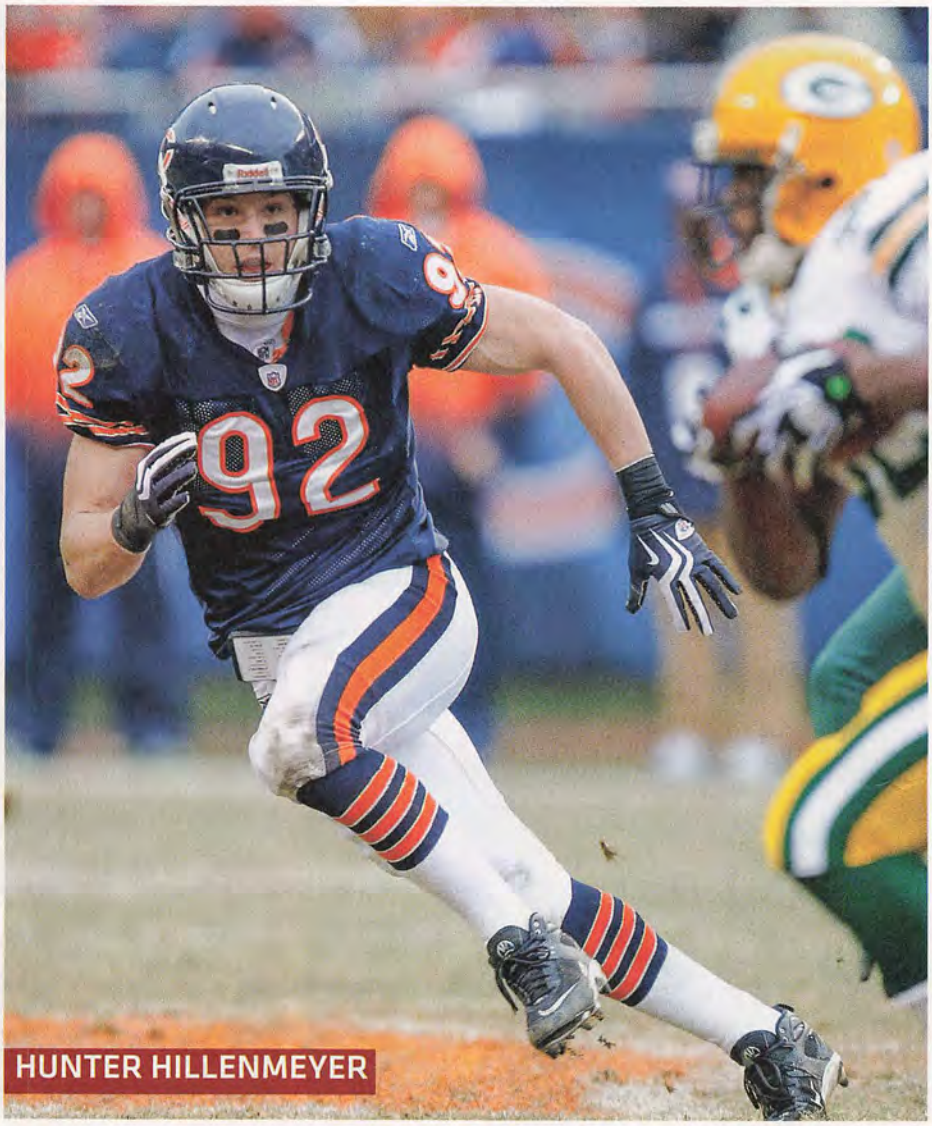
He also was being concussed at an alarming rate.

"I had a concussion in the preseason of 2010, got out there for the season-opener and, without even getting hit, just didn't feel right," Hillenmeyer recalls about his final game. "They pulled me off the field and ran the battery of tests. And after the game, we went through my entire history of my five diagnosed concussions. And the fact is that I had gotten to a susceptibility point where I really couldn't take a hit to the head."

That was when Hillenmeyer knew it was time to retire.

Today, at 34, he doesn't consider his decision to retire to be anything like that of Borland, Willis, Worilds or Locker. Those players decided to walk away from the game while their health was still intact. Hillenmeyer didn't, despite being at the forefront on the head trauma issue during his time in the league. He managed his career around his concussions instead of stopping it because of them.

He says he is symptom-free of any concussions five years later. He doesn't have chronic headaches or memory loss or any of the early signs of CTE (Chronic Traumatic Encephalopathy), which has been linked to concussions related to football. Yet, he wonders sometimes if a headache is just a headache or if it's a warning sign of something more serious. If forgetting a phone number or where he put the car keys is cause for alarm.



HUNTER HILLENMEYER

Hillenmeyer has great respect for the players who choose to walk away early, because for them, staying in the game another year for another big payday or fame or any of the other trappings associated with being in the NFL simply isn't a priority.

"I feel great," Hillenmeyer says. "In some ways, the fact that I was as informed as I was for a player playing during the 2000s helped. Even in 2006-07, I was aware that I needed to be very cautious with how I handled a brain injury. But when you're a retired player in your 30s and you look at the generation ahead of you — I've been to a couple of alumni events in Chicago — and anecdotally, they paint a pretty grim picture."

Hillenmeyer knows that his situation might be on the rosier side, too. He was an academic All-American at Vanderbilt and while in the league served on the NFL's Player Safety and Welfare Committee. He was privy to the arguments being made by the medical community about the long-term effects of concussions.

Hillenmeyer, who co-founded the gaming app company Over-Dog, where fans can compete against pro athletes, wonders what his life might be like in a few years if that "grim picture" becomes a reality for him. He never hid concussions from the Bears, but he also continued to play the sport even though he was aware of the risks. He wonders if going the route that Borland, Worilds and Willis took might not have been the better plan.

"You don't see a lot of guys that are aging very well — and that scares you," Hillenmeyer says of his conversations with older NFL retirees. "Unless you're just burying your head in the sand, any player would get a little nervous when they look at that. So at worst, you're headed in the exact same trajectory. So you do have to step back, take pause and ask yourself, 'Was it all worth it?'"

'IT'S KIND OF LIKE A DEPRESSION'

Before the end came for Reggie Wilkes, he had begun the process of preparing himself. A linebacker with the Eagles and Falcons from 1978-87, Wilkes took classes at Temple University's School of Medicine early in his career. After realizing that medical school and the NFL couldn't co-exist, he turned his attention to business, and he began taking classes at Penn's Wharton School.

Midway through his career, he started working for Merrill Lynch in the offseason as a second job. So when he was released following an injury during the 1987 season, he decided it was time for the next step.

"I was just ready, mentally, to go and move on," Wilkes says. "I knew it was going to end."

Why is Wilkes' story an important one? Because he was prepared for life after the NFL. He parlayed his experiences with Merrill Lynch while he was a player into a successful career in business, returning to the wealth management giant in 2007. He is now a senior financial advisor in suburban Philadelphia, where many of his clients are current or former professional athletes.

And more often than not, he sees players who think they are mentally ready to leave professional sports. But most aren't.

"Every professional athlete — whether you've played one year in the league or 10 — goes through a physiological change," Wilkes says. "It's kind of like a depression. You're trying to figure out how you wean yourself off of something that you've been so emotionally and physically attached to."

For Wilkes, his safety net was his financial career. For Hillenmeyer, it was his own company.

Some players transition better than others.

Running back Rashard Mendenhall, a former first-round pick in 2008 with the Steelers, abruptly retired after the 2013 season. He was 26. "Football was pretty cool, but I don't want to play anymore," he wrote in an article for The Huffington Post announcing his retirement. Mendenhall is now a screenwriter, living in Los Angeles, where he recently served as a script consultant for an upcoming HBO series about the life of retired pro football players.

Worilds, whose representatives declined an interview for this story on his behalf, left the NFL and began working with the Jehovah's Witnesses.

For others, the absence of football can only make a bad situation worse.

"For football players, on average, the retirement age is 25," Wilkes says. "You still have 60 years of living, so you've got to figure out how your money is going to last. Players don't think about that — that normal people are earning income until around 55 years, but for football players, it's half that. The average length of a career is 3.5 years, so once you're 25, you're on the down end of your career in football."

A NEW PATH

When he's asked about football, Miller is clear: He did not leave the game to become a crusader against it.

Without football, he doesn't get from Perrysburg, Ohio, to the University of Michigan. Without football, he doesn't get the opportunity to learn some of the life lessons about discipline, accountability and teamwork. Without football, he doesn't get to begin the next phase of his life — entering the business world.

But at some point, between high school and college, it stopped being fun.

"It's a job. It's your livelihood, whereas before that, it's a game," Miller says. "It becomes work, and that's okay. We all know that's what we're signing up for."

Miller had thoughts last season about making the 2014 campaign his final one in a Michigan uniform, but he decided to give it another go after Jim Harbaugh was hired to replace Brady Hoke. He went through the offseason workout programs and the first week of spring practice — which he described as one of his best. But he no longer had the desire to play and announced his intention to leave the team.

"For some people that's really hard to understand," he says. "And I understand that. To play college football is a blessing."

There were some people who tried to convince him that he was making a short-sighted and ill-informed decision. Miller wouldn't be swayed. He had already suffered one concussion in high school, and he believes he had two or three more at Michigan (though he only reported one). Given what he knows about the long-terms effects, he decided that if he had lost the desire to play, it wasn't worth it.

Miller wasn't the only college football player to make that decision this spring. Vanderbilt quarterback Patton Robinette — who started five games in two seasons — retired from the sport in March. Robinette, who will enroll at Vanderbilt's School of Medicine in the fall, missed five games last fall after suffering a concussion against South Carolina. He also had a concussion in high school.

West Virginia quarterback Clint Trickett, a two-year starter, was forced into retirement before the Mountaineers' bowl game. Trickett had suffered five concussions in a 14-month span. He hid two of them from team trainers in order to keep playing.

That's a familiar refrain, even at the next level.

"After I retired, I had two good friends of mine who were still on the Bears call me with a slightly different version of the same story," Hillenmeyer says. "That Tuesday or Wednesday after they took a big hit in a game, they definitely felt a little bit off, but they didn't tell the trainers or get noticed by the trainers. But now they were pretty sure they had a concussion, and they were trying to decide whether or not to tell the doctors."

That's why Borland decided not to risk more years in the NFL. That's why Willis and Worilds and Locker made the same decision. That's why Hillenmeyer decided it was time to stop playing and trying to avoid the next big hit. That's why Wilkes warns players that their careers won't last forever.

That's why one of Miller's "rare days" when he misses football lasted only briefly during the NFL Draft.

It was his dream, but now he has a different one. He hopes to get into high school coaching, where he can work with kids before the game of football gets to be too big.

"Some people love the game more than I do, and that's their only way," he says. "And that's fine. That's their prerogative. For me, it wasn't that. And I'm very excited about the next chapter."

Something to PROVE

Teams can strike gold with undrafted free agents eager to show they belong

By Michael Bradley

Ryan Hewitt, who had only 59 receptions and 28 carries during his career at Stanford, overcame his draft snub and made the Bengals' roster as an undrafted free agent.

Somebody from an NFL team told Ryan Hewitt he would be drafted in the fourth round last year, so he figured he was set. Maybe the fourth was a little too high, but he would definitely find a home by the sixth round. Seventh, for sure.

The Bengals weren't as bullish on Hewitt as a fourth-rounder, but they were definitely thinking about choosing the Stanford fullback/tight end/H-back during the final two rounds. But, as things often go on draft day, there were other needs to be addressed, bigger holes to be filled. Cincinnati never selected Hewitt.

Nobody else did, either. Throughout the draft's third day, Hewitt heard from a couple teams that told him that he was a possible sixth- or seventh-round pick. Stay tuned, they said. Be ready. He was ready, all right. He was also left out on the street.

"It's tough," he says. "You work your whole career, and you want to hear your name called on TV."

When it was all over, when even Mr. Irrelevant had received the Happy Call, things started to get really weird. A guy who hadn't drawn enough interest to get a single team to choose him in three days of drafting all of a sudden could have used about four more phones. Teams were calling him. His agent was calling him. Teams were calling his agent. His agent was calling teams. After spending almost three days experiencing nothing but dashed hopes and dreams, Hewitt was in serious demand.

"I spent 15 minutes on the phone with my agent and different teams trying to figure out where to go," Hewitt says.

That was it. Hewitt had only 15 minutes to decide. So did hundreds of other players throughout the nation. The minute the draft ends, and sometimes even before it ends, NFL teams embark on a high-speed chase for undrafted free agents, in order to sign those who weren't chosen. In some cases, the goal is to fill out a roster for mini-camps, OTAs and training camp. But in the case of players like Hewitt, it's much more. Cincinnati director of player personnel Duke Tobin had spent some time with Hewitt before the draft and had made a note to pursue him if nobody chose the Stanford product. The Bengals sold Hewitt on a chance to compete for a roster spot, not just be a body to step in during spring and summer drills. Sure, he was a "tweener," and his versatility hurt him because he didn't have one specific position. But he was a tough, talented football player, and the Bengals liked that.

Hewitt: Ric Fogel/Sportfolio; Gates: Peter Brouillet

"We had laid the groundwork with Ryan," Tobin says. "Throughout the pre-draft process, we had visited with him, and when the draft was over, we immediately recruited him."

Things worked out well for Hewitt. He made the team and played in all 16 games as a tight end, fullback and special teams performer. Hewitt caught 10 passes, ran the ball once (for no gain) and made four tackles as part of coverage units. He certainly wasn't on any short lists for Rookie of the Year, but Hewitt contributed to the team's playoff run and impressed coach Marvin Lewis, who was talking about Hewitt's 2015 opportunities as early as last August. Though he had plenty of suitors in those frenzied minutes after the draft, Hewitt made a good choice.

"I chose Cincinnati because of its style of offense and the personnel they had," Hewitt says. "I thought I could make an impact and beat people out. It was the best fit."

Teams bring in around 15 undrafted free agents each year, usually with little or no fanfare. But while the vast majority end up getting cut or finding spots on practice squads, there are some big success stories, and plenty do make teams' 53-man rosters. As of October 2014, there were 74 undrafted rookies playing on Sundays.

Jeff Saturday spent 14 years playing center for Indianapolis (13) and Green Bay (one), reaching six Pro Bowls and earning two first-team All-Pro nods. And one of the heroes of last year's Super Bowl, Patriots cornerback Malcolm Butler, was not picked in the 2014 draft. This isn't just a recent phenomenon. There have been dozens of great NFL performers who were not chosen, even when the draft used to encompass more than seven rounds.

Quarterback Kurt Warner, tight end Antonio Gates, defensive tackle John Randle, wideout Wes Welker and even legendary cornerback Dick "Night Train" Lane made it through the annual "Player Selection Meeting" unwanted. In today's world of highly specialized scouting, it's unlikely we will see too many Hall of Famers joining the league from the streets; but there are 15 undrafted players who have made it to Canton. There are only 13 No. 1 overall picks there. Every year there is talent left out of the draft, and teams work hard to identify and sign players who can help them.

"Once you get to the seventh round, the difference between getting picked and not getting picked is almost none," Tobin says. "If you fit a team's needs better, you get picked. But it's difficult to know what guys aren't going to get picked.

"After the draft, it's surprising. You say, 'Oh, he didn't get picked. Oh, he didn't get picked. Oh, he didn't get picked.'"

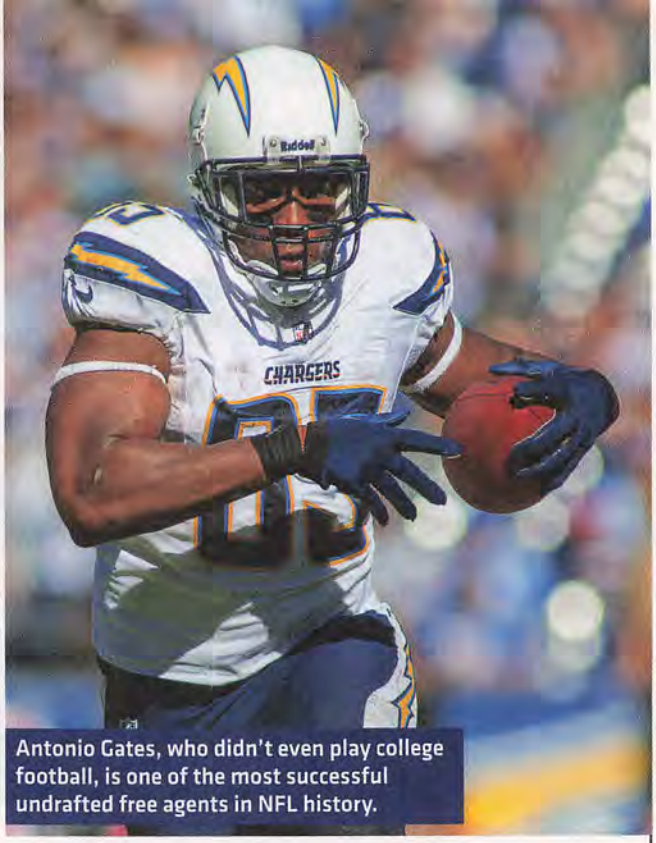
Saturday remembers the moment when his confidence in the NFL Draft process began to waver. He was standing against a wall during the 1998 NFL Combine when someone yelled out how long his arms had measured. One of the ways teams often judge a lineman's potential is by reach. A player with longer arms is more capable of fending off the advances of enemy defenders. Those who allow opposing linemen to get closer are at a disadvantage. Or so the reasoning goes. Although Saturday was a two-time first-team All-ACC center, he didn't fit the NFL stereotype for the position. He was listed generously at 6'2" and weighed just 285 pounds. And then there were those arms.

"When they yelled out my arm length, everybody looked down at their clipboards and started writing," Saturday says of the assembled scouts and personnel execs. "I said, 'That's not a good sign.' Later, my agent called me and said not to worry. I told him, 'These are the same arms I played so well with in college.'"

The Combine markdown was the beginning of a tough stretch for Saturday, who despite being the third-ranked center heading into the annual poke-and-prod session, wasn't chosen. A couple teams had called during the second day (the Draft didn't expand to three sessions until 2010) to tell Saturday that he was being considered, but none had made the Big Call. To make things even more difficult, Saturday's agent, Ralph Cindrich, represented UNC defensive end Greg Ellis, who had been a first-round pick of the Cowboys. Cindrich was traveling to Dallas the second day of the draft, and he wasn't available to help Saturday navigate the free-agent morass.



Antonio Gates, who didn't even play college football, is one of the most successful undrafted free agents in NFL history.

As a result, it took Saturday a week to hook on with Baltimore. But the relationship didn't last too long. In fact, Saturday didn't even make it to training camp with the Ravens.

"I got to Baltimore, and they had franchised their center Wally Williams (ironically another undrafted free agent) and had another center, Jeff Mitchell, that they had drafted (the year before)," Saturday says. "I walked into the offensive line meeting room, and it was full of giants. Everybody weighed 330 pounds, and here I am at 285. It was not the room for me."

Saturday spent almost a year working as a manager at an electrical supply store in Raleigh. He was staying in shape, but it wasn't as if NFL teams were suddenly realizing the colossal error they had made and begging him to sign with him. It took his former college roommate, Nate Hobgood-Chittick, to make it happen. In 1999, Hobgood-Chittick had been picked up by Indianapolis, and though he had no professional cachet, he went into Colts GM Bill Polian's office and told him he had to sign Saturday. Polian, who had been in Carolina while Saturday played at UNC, remembered the center and signed him. Once there, Saturday fit into line coach Howard Mudd's system, which emphasized speed and intelligence over brawn.

"(Polian) gave me a shot," Saturday says. "Howard Mudd told me he wanted an aggressive football player who did exactly what he said. It worked out well, and I spent 14 years in the league."

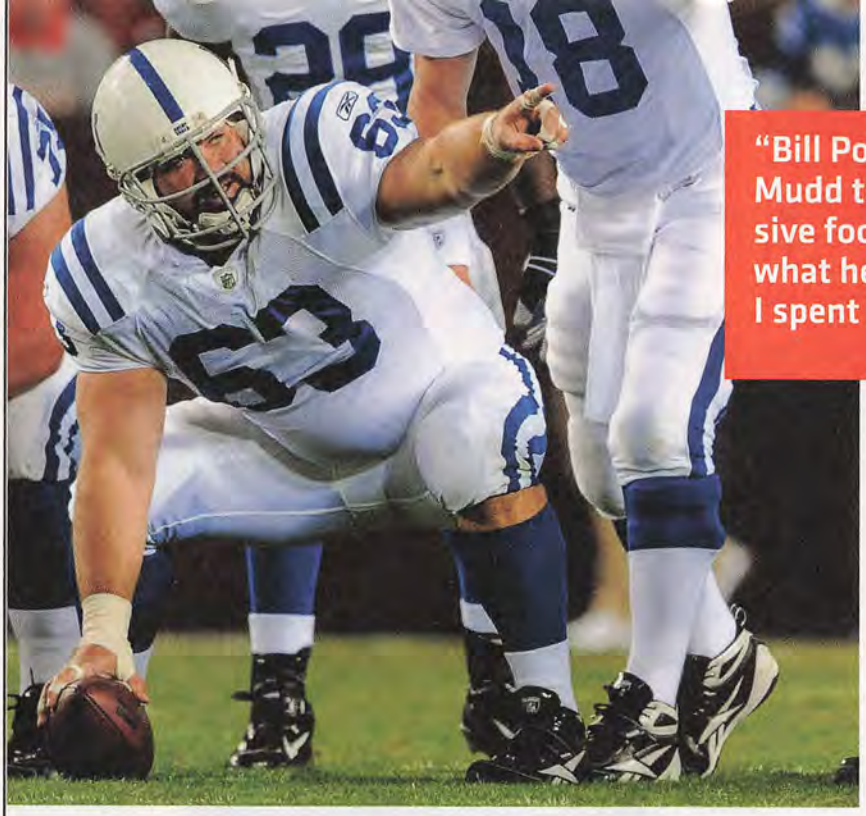
The months leading up to the NFL Draft can seem like weeding a giant flowerbed that has been untended for months. As many as 6,000 players are eligible to be chosen. Of course, most of them have no business being in an NFL team's building, much less on the field every Sunday. Once the easy work is done, and about 90 percent of the players are eliminated from consideration, it's time to find the prospects who might just be able to play for a team.

A team can have 250 players on its draft board. Or 300. Maybe



"Bill Polian gave me a shot. Howard Mudd told me he wanted an aggressive football player who did exactly what he said. It worked out well, and I spent 14 years in the league."
– Jeff Saturday

only 200. That's a lot of people to consider when there are only seven rounds. The key component for all of them is fit. Houston may only have 150 of the same players on its board that the Jets do. Not everybody thinks the same way about each prospect, particularly if one plays a 3-4 defense, and the other is a 4-3 squad.

"We look at players who can come in and compete for roster spots," Seattle director of college scouting Scott Fitterer says. "We don't have a set number on the board."

It's pretty obvious that certain players will be gone well before the frenzied rush to sign free agents begins. That's not something Fitterer and his fellow executives worry about when trying to decide who will be there. Their focus is on the late-round prospects — like Hewitt — who could escape the sixth and seventh round. According to Fitterer, the Seahawks treat every collegian the same way, analyzing strengths and weaknesses, the better to get an idea who would best fit their roster. Tobin says he and his staff evaluate and speak before the draft with players who weren't invited to the Combine or who may not have performed well in Indianapolis. The Bengals bring dozens of players to their facilities to work them out, interview them and determine whether they will fit the team's needs.

Teams all over the league have had success mining the undrafted ranks. Fitterer estimates "five or six" players on Seattle's Super Bowl XLVIII-winning team were free agents. Jermaine Kearse, who caught the winning TD in overtime against Green Bay in last year's NFC Championship Game and two weeks later made the amazing reception in the waning moments of the Super Bowl, was signed by the Seahawks in 2012, after he wasn't selected. Another Seattle wideout, Doug Baldwin, wasn't chosen in 2011 but impressed Seattle enough that it gave him a three-year, $13 million extension last spring.

"We're looking to find extremely competitive guys with athletic ability and a skill set that fits our style," Fitterer says. "If there is a 6'1" corner that runs a 4.4 (40-yard dash) but is undeveloped, we're intrigued. We look at him as a developmental project. Our coaches are teachers."

Even if a player is cut by a team during training camp, he still has film on his play from practices and preseason games that he can use to pitch his talents to someone else. Just being with a team confers a status on a player and makes it a little easier for him to find a spot with someone else. It's rare that someone like Saturday or Warner, who spent a lot of time out of football, gets a position. That's why it's important that while teams are evaluating them, the players do their homework and figure out what team is best for them. A prospect could receive calls from five or six teams during the half-hour following the draft's completion. If he merely signs with his childhood favorite, he could be making a big mistake. Players and their agents must pay close attention to teams' styles and how crowded their particular position is on the roster.

"The kids are more educated than ever," Fitterer says. "They are able to search on-line and look at depth charts. They are informed."

While undrafted players need to make informed decisions, teams' desires to sign them continue to grow. The thrill of unearthing a talent and having him contribute is a victory; adding a piece to the roster at a low cost, most often at the rookie minimum, has equal appeal. When the Seahawks won the Super Bowl, they did so with a large number of players whose salaries were quite manageable. Teams able to stock the shelves without bestowing gigantic contracts on all of them are able to strike a fine balance between their stars and everyone else. It may sound somewhat unfair, but the rigid, salary cap-driven economics of the league mandate that approach. Teams love to find young players they can use for special teams and spot work on offense and defense.

The bonus is that those who make teams from the "streets" are highly motivated to prove themselves. They were left out of the draft pool, and they want to make everyone aware of their mistakes. Fitterer remembers that Baldwin and Kearse elevated themselves to "special" status due to their drive to show that they belonged in the NFL.

"They have a chip on their shoulders when they come in here," Fitterer says. "And the guys with the chips on their shoulders often separate themselves from the rest."

Hewitt enjoyed his first year with the Bengals, and he's looking forward to enlarging his role in 2015. He doesn't, however, expect any favors. He knows the team will bring in a player — or perhaps more — to compete with him this year. He isn't a first-round pick with a guaranteed contract, or even a middle-round choice with a bit more job security. When the Bengals convene for training camp, the next Ryan Hewitt could be on the field, looking to impress and defy convention by grabbing a roster spot.

"I am expecting them to bring in competition," Hewitt says. "Iron sharpens iron. I expect them to bring in a stud who can help them. That's not my concern. They have to do what's best for the team."

And they look just about everywhere to do so.

PEYTON MANNING

Tim Umphrey

Old is NEW Again

Broncos hope some old friends can bring new life to Super Bowl quest

By Jim Armstrong

At 39, after 17 years of absorbing blindside hits and carrying the weight and fate of two franchises on his shoulders, is it any surprise that Peyton Manning is tired? He's tired, all right. Tired of answering all those questions about his age.

NFL history is littered with cautionary tales of quarterbacks who were highly productive into their mid-30s, only to lose the race with Father Time as they approached 40. So how will Manning fare in this, his 18th season of working on Sundays?

"You can't lump them all into the same category," says Manning, when asked about all those other 39-year-old quarterbacks. "I think there are young 39s and old 39s. I'm in that young group, for sure. It's all about trying to do your job no matter how old you are, whether you're a 22-year-old rookie coming in or not. I guess I have to answer questions about it, but I'm not interested in talking about how old I am."

That age-old saying about being only as old as you feel? Now that's what Manning is talking about. Like Bob Seger, he has turned the page on a disappointing, if not depressing 2014 season, and is ready to rock 'n' roll.

There's no denying how ugly Manning's third season in Denver was. Sure, the Broncos won 12 games and their fourth straight AFC West title. But they didn't just lose their one and only playoff game. With their season on the line, they didn't bother to show up. Instead, they imploded under the weight of personal agendas, with several players and coaches running for their professional lives the moment the final anticlimactic seconds ticked away.

Manning ended the season with a torn right quadriceps, a sizeable dent in his ego, and a major career decision to make: To return or not to return? That was the question. Or at least that was the storyline among the media. Truth is, Manning was never serious about walking away.

It happens every spring. Manning, in a personal rite of passage, sets aside his emotions and soldiers on in preparation for another season. It's in his DNA. It's what he does, who he is, how he's wired. The myth and the legend can wait. He still wants to be The Man. Whether retirement is off on the horizon or just over the dashboard, he's going to keep the pedal to the metal and compete.

Oh, and let the record show that a new coaching staff, headlined by former Broncos offensive coordinator Gary Kubiak and several assistants with long-time ties to the organization, has only served to rejuvenate him more than usual. It isn't just apparent. It's blatantly obvious to everyone who's seen Manning sweating it out behind the scenes at the Broncos' suburban Denver training facility.

"He's still got a lot of juice in him," says Broncos wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders. "For everyone, last year was a disappointment. But at the same time, it's a new year so everyone is rejuvenated. It's

"I think there are young 39s and old 39s. I'm in that young group, for sure. It's all about trying to do your job no matter how old you are."* – Peyton Manning the same thing with Peyton. You talk about a guy who understands that the clock is ticking for him. He loves this game. I've never seen a guy who loves the game of football as much as he loves it. That passion and that spark is there."

Duke head coach David Cutcliffe, Manning's offensive coordinator back in the day at the University of Tennessee, wasn't sure what to expect when Manning arrived in Durham, N.C., for his annual offseason passing camp. But Cutcliffe told nationally syndicated radio host Jim Rome that Manning was a "boatload of energy and enthusiasm."

Why shouldn't Manning be excited? He has fielded countless questions about how he'll fit into Kubiak's zone-blocking, run-oriented offense that requires the quarterback to make plays outside the pocket, foreign territory for Manning. But all those questions miss the fundamental point. Fact is, Manning and everyone else in the Broncos organization needed a change.

After three years of Super Bowl or bust, former head coach John Fox had run his course in Denver. Emotions were frayed, and game-planning sessions were giving way to travel itineraries. In the days preceding the Broncos' 24–13 playoff loss to Indianapolis, both coordinators, Jack Del Rio and Adam Gase, were off interviewing for head coaching jobs. On the morning of the game, a national television report linked Fox to the head coaching job in Chicago.

Add a handful of starters with one eye on their playbooks and another on free-agent paydays, and the Broncos were anything but focused to make a second straight Super Bowl run. The day after the loss, Fox was gone. Three days later, he was hired by the Bears amid speculation — which Fox denies, but no one in the Broncos' organization is buying — that he leaked his interest in the job because of Elway's refusal to give him a contract extension. Del Rio, meanwhile, became head coach of the Raiders, and Gase joined Fox as offensive coordinator in Chicago.

If last season was filled with friction in Denver, this year will be defined by the excitement over the hiring of Kubiak, who served as Elway's roommate and backup for nine years and later was Mike Shanahan's offensive coordinator from 1995-2005 before leaving to become head coach of the Houston Texans. After leaving Houston he had settled in as offensive coordinator in Baltimore, telling teams he wasn't interested in interviewing for head coaching positions. And then all heaven broke loose: The Broncos job became available.

"This is a game changer," says Kubiak. "It's as simple as that. This is where I got my start. This is home for me. I can't wait to just go out there and fight the fight and believe in this city, this team and this organization. I was standing there with them when they won their last championship, and that's what we all work for."

"I know what Gary Kubiak is about," Elway says. "I had a chance to play with him and play for him. I know his philosophies and I know what he can do. I know his goals are the same as mine, and that's to win and win world championships. He's a Denver Bronco. He knows the culture of this organization. He knows the culture of this building."

And he isn't alone. Defensive coordinator Wade Phillips had the same job in Denver from 1989-92 before serving as the Broncos' head coach from 1993-94. Offensive coordinator Rick Dennison played linebacker for the Broncos and was an assistant coach on Shanahan's staff before joining Kubiak in Houston. Then there's special teams coordinator Joe DeCamillis, who has become one of the most respected assistants in the league after cutting his teeth on father-in-law Dan Reeves' Broncos staffs more than 20 years ago.

Phillips doesn't renovate defenses, he resurrects them. To wit: The 1988 Broncos had perhaps the worst defense of the Reeves era. One year later, with Phillips orchestrating the defense, they played in the Super Bowl. The 2003 San Diego Chargers finished 4–12. After hiring Phillips, they won 12 games and finished atop the AFC West. The Texans were 6–10 before Kubiak hired Phillips, whereupon they made their first-ever playoff appearance.

Phillips faces a different type of challenge in Denver. The Broncos return a handful of Pro Bowlers on the defensive side of the ball. Granted, statistics can lie in today's NFL, but the Broncos finished third in the league in 2014 in overall defense. The challenge, then, isn't to resurrect the defense so much as take it to the next level. That, of course, being the stuff of Super Bowl champions.

"I was a lousy head coach, but I'm a pretty good defensive coordinator," says Phillips, who came out of retirement to rejoin Kubiak in Denver. "That's what I do well. I just wanted to get back to doing that and I couldn't be happier. This is probably the best situation, defensively, that I've come into. … Normally they have a bad year and they've brought me in as defensive coordinator. This team has a lot of talent on defense, but we're going to do better."

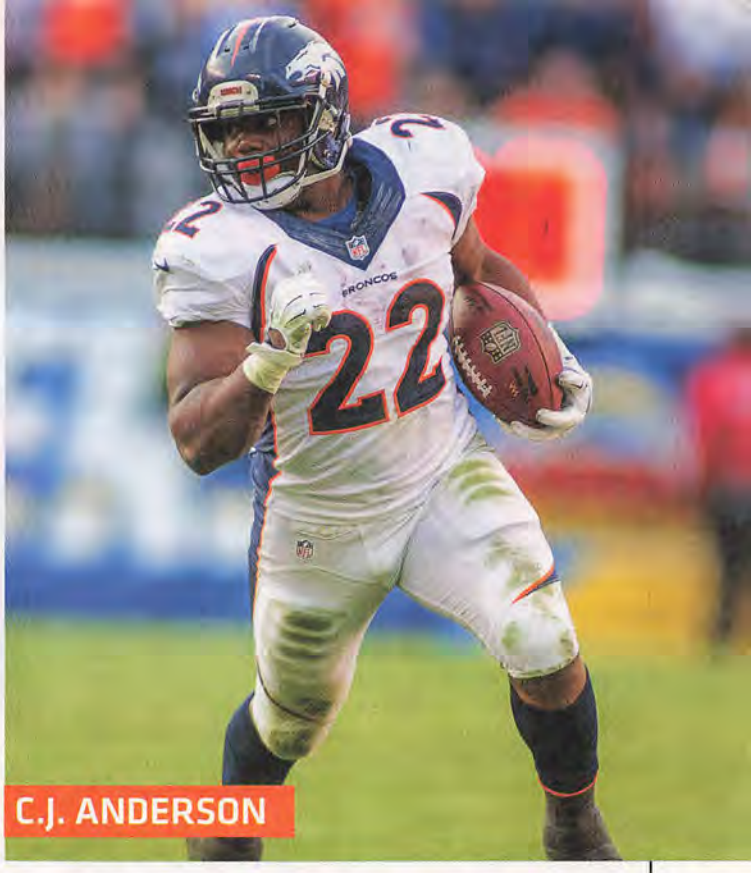
Twelve wins and four consecutive division championships, and the song remains the same in Denver: What have you done for us lately? Welcome to life in the Rockies with Manning under center. Ever since the five-time MVP's arrival in March 2012, the Broncos have been a one-trick pony with one singular goal, one primary purpose, one reason for being. As Fox discovered, getting to the Super Bowl isn't good enough.

Elway knows what Manning is going through, having walked in those shoes in a previous professional life. It's remarkable, the similar paths the two have taken. Elway was the first pick in the 1983 draft, 15 years before the Colts selected Manning No. 1. Elway, like Manning, received more than his share of criticism before finally winning a Super Bowl. Elway spent 16 seasons with the same franchise, two more than Manning. During his Hall of Fame career, Elway engineered 35 fourth-quarter comebacks and 46 game-winning drives. And how many did Manning have on his résumé when he signed with the Broncos? Thirty-five comebacks and 46 game-winning drives.

Elway won Super Bowls at age 37 and 38 despite an assortment of injuries, including a deteriorating left knee that ultimately led to replacement surgery. How did he do it? With Terrell Davis behind him in the backfield grinding out huge clumps of yards in Shanahan's system, the same one employed by Kubiak. Now comes C.J. Anderson, who emerged from the shadows last season — 17 carries in the Broncos' first seven regular-season games, 648 rushing yards in their final six — to earn a Pro Bowl berth. In Elway's mind, the threat of Anderson breaking loose for big plays in Kubiak's offense can do for Manning what Davis did for him.

"Peyton could fit in this offense very easily," says Elway. "It's a very helpful offense. It's a lot more dependent on balance so Peyton is hopefully not going to have to throw the ball 50 or 55 times. As an older quarterback, it's a perfect system to be in. It's really a great system for any quarterback, but I think it's even more helpful the older you get."

It's not like Manning will morph into a game manager or one of those other catch phrases that describe your basic mediocre quarterback. He's coming off a season in which he threw 39 touchdown passes, a career year for most quarterbacks, and undoubtedly would have had more if he hadn't struggled down the stretch with the quad injury. If he's going to win that elusive second Super Bowl, it will be in Denver, with Elway and another former quarterback, Kubiak, forming the foundation of his support system.



Ask him about adjusting to Kubiak's offense, and Manning has to suppress a laugh.

"I like to think I'm pretty versatile, believe it or not," says Manning, smirk completely intact. "I feel like I can execute whatever plays the coach calls. … You're always looking into learning football. Whether you've got changes or you're doing the same thing, you're always learning out there. As soon as you stop learning, something is not going right. So I'm looking forward to learning Coach Kubiak's philosophies and trying to do my part as a quarterback. I'm looking forward to the process."

Says Kubiak: "We're going to do what he does best. Obviously, if we run the ball well, which we plan on doing, we're going to move the quarterback (out of the pocket) at some point. … He's been very excited. He's been challenged. He said that to me a couple of times: 'I'm challenged again. I'm having to learn new stuff because I've been doing this for so long.' I think that's good for all of us no matter how long you've been in the league."

Now about all those other 39-year-old quarterbacks. Elway, at 38, is the oldest starting quarterback ever to win a Super Bowl. Since 1983, only two quarterbacks 39 or older — Phil Simms and Brett Favre — have won playoff games. Some 39-year-olds, most notably Favre and Warren Moon, have put up nice numbers, but quarterbacks that old typically are stopgaps. They're starters by default because their teams couldn't find a younger alternative. Now comes Manning, who'll try to lead the new-look Broncos to a Super Bowl victory with his 40th birthday on the horizon.

No-huddle offense, meet the no-time-to-waste offense.

"With Peyton, obviously there isn't much he can add to his legacy," says Elway. "As I told him, 'You don't have to throw for another yard and you don't need to throw another touchdown pass because your legacy is going to be one of the all-time greats as it is.' Where he can really add to his legacy is to win a Super Bowl."

POWER STRUGGLES

Egos and Agendas Often Prevent Coaches and GMs from Co-Existing Comfortably

By Charean Williams

Jim Harbaugh posted a 44–19–1 record in four years in San Francisco, never had a losing record and took the 49ers to the NFC Championship Game three times. John Fox went 46–18 in four years in Denver, never had a losing record and took the Broncos to a Super Bowl. Yet, when Harbaugh and Fox parted ways with their teams after last season, the NFL reacted with a collective yawn.

"I've seen it too many times," Hall of Fame general manager Bill Polian says. "Who knows why these things change. There's always internal dynamics that you can't really put your finger on. That's the way it looks. But it's been done before, and I'm sure it'll be done again."

Harbaugh and Trent Baalke went through a messy divorce, with the coach claiming it was not nearly as mutual as the general manager depicted. Philosophical differences sent Harbaugh to the University of Michigan, leading to the 49ers' elevation of little-known assistant Jim Tomsula to head coach.

Fox became the first Broncos coach in 30 years not to have final say in all football matters. And he and general manager John Elway eventually reached a point where they agreed to disagree, parting ways when the Broncos failed to get over the hump in three years with Peyton Manning as their quarterback. Fox moved on to Chicago, and Elway hired good buddy Gary Kubiak as the Broncos' new head coach.

"In any relationship, whether it be player-coach, coach-GM, you're always going to have bumpy patches," Elway said at the press conference announcing Fox's departure. "I think the main thing between John and I was we disagreed on how to get to the next level. We accomplished so much, four AFC West championships. But I think the biggest miss between us was how we can take that next step and what it was going to take to get to that next step. I think that's where the disagreement came from."

Why can't they all just get along?

More than 21 years have passed since Jerry Jones and Jimmy Johnson parted ways. Yet, they continue to play tug-of-war over credit for the back-to-back Lombardi Trophies the Cowboys won with them. Their five-year relationship ended after a public feud, with Johnson claiming his "girlfriend knows more about football" than Jones, and Jones countering that "any one of 500 coaches could have won those Super Bowls."

Johnson walked away with a $2 million payoff, and Jones' Cowboys won another Super Bowl two years later with Barry Switzer as the coach. They haven't won one since.

JIM HARBAUGH

The coach Johnson succeeded in Dallas, Tom Landry, lasted 29 years with president/general manager Tex Schramm. Former Bears general manager Jerry Angelo says his research revealed that the Landry-Schramm union stands as the only one in the modern era to last its whole tenure.

"Nobody was jealous of who got the credit," says Gil Brandt, player personnel director for Dallas from 1960-89. "We got along even though we didn't always agree. The funny thing is we all lived within a mile of one another. But I'll say this: It was just a lot easier then than it is now with the salary cap and everything else that goes into it."

The ugly divorces have become far more common than the long marriages. The Chargers fired Marty Schottenheimer after a 14–2 season and a one-and-done playoff exit in 2006, citing a "dysfunctional situation" between the coach and general manager A.J. Smith.

Sometimes the coach loses the battle; other times it's the general manager who goes. The Titans fired Floyd Reese after the 2006 season to end a power struggle between the general manager and coach Jeff Fisher.

Fisher worked with general managers Reese and Mike Reinfeldt and president/CEO Jeff Diamond during his 16 seasons in Houston/Tennessee. He enters his fourth season with Les Snead as his general manager in St. Louis.

"It takes a lot of work. It takes a lot of trust," Fisher says. "Communication is important. The responsibilities are so different. You have to share those responsibilities and respect those responsibilities. It starts from Day 1. There are going to be issues and disagreements."

One of Bill Parcells' most memorable lines came during his departure from the Patriots after the 1996 season when he said, "If they want you to cook the dinner, at least they ought to let you shop for some of the groceries."

Yet, Parcells' Super Bowl titles came with George Young as his general manager.

Mike Holmgren, seeking more power, left Green Bay after the 1998 season despite going 75–37 with two Super Bowl appearances and a Vince Lombardi Trophy. With Ron Wolf having final say concerning personnel, Holmgren went to Seattle for the dual role. Yet, Holmgren ended up being stripped of his general manager title in Seattle, going 86–74 with one NFC title in his tenure as head coach.

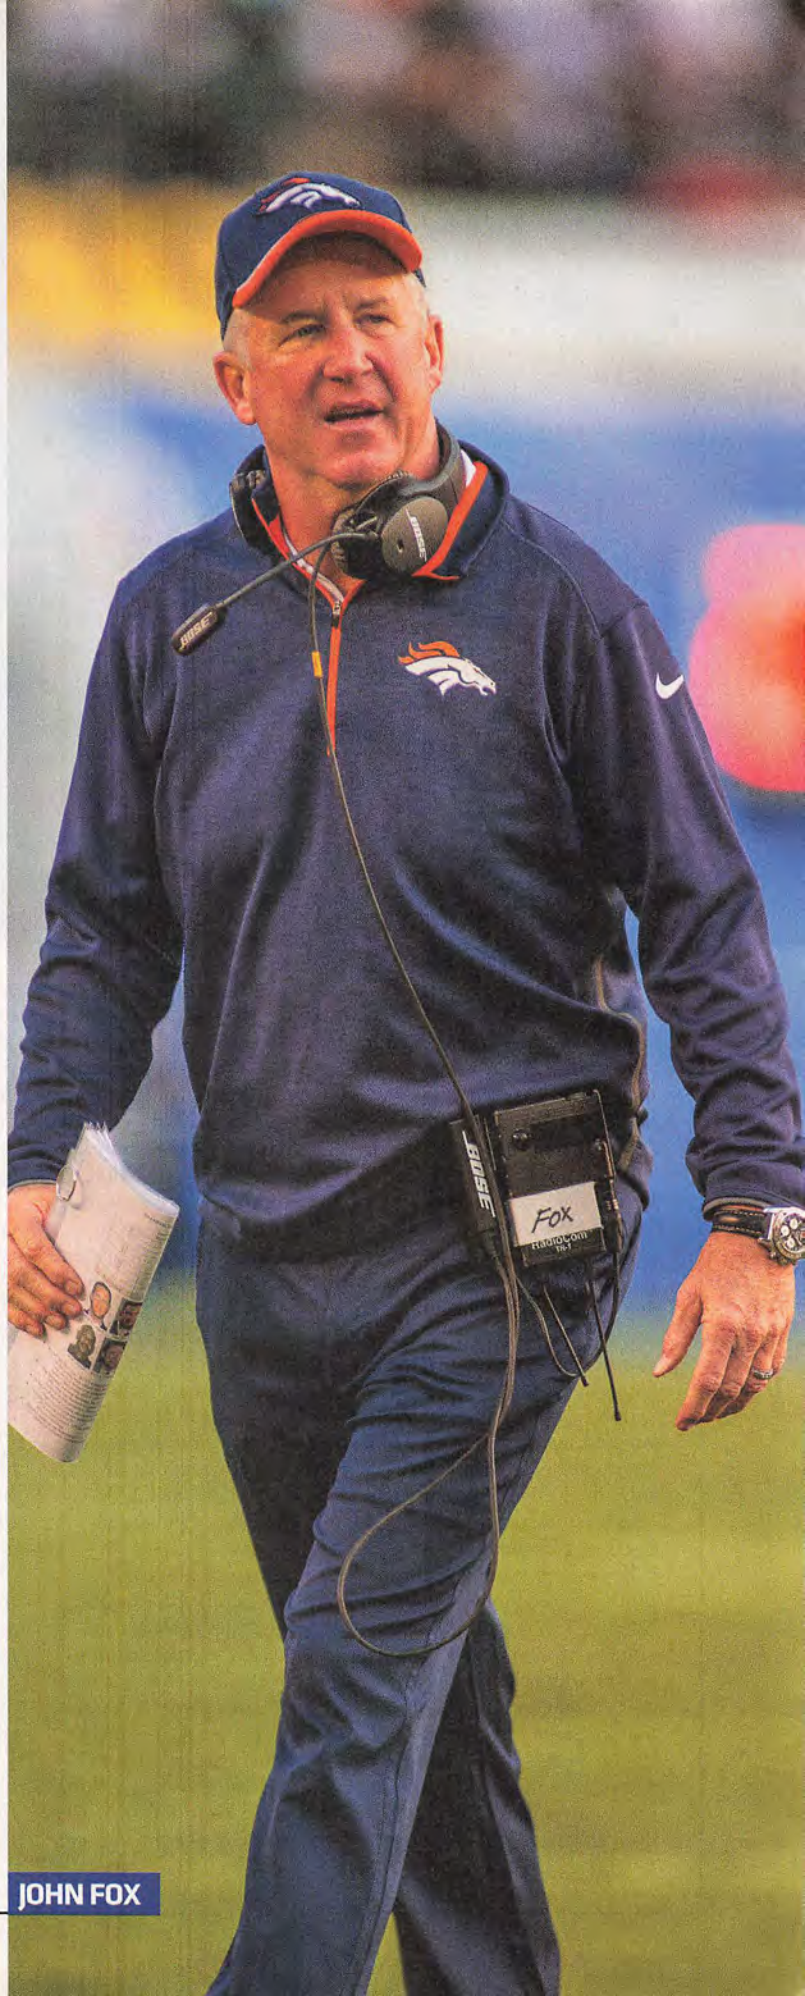
It's the reason few owners allow the coach to have control over all football decisions.

Bill Belichick, of course, wields the power in New England, with those around him understanding their roles. Nick Caserio, Belichick's trusted right-hand man, recently signed a contract extension with the team through the 2020 season. Caserio enters his 15th season with the organization, including his eighth as the director of player personnel, apparently comfortable with Belichick getting most of the credit.

The Eagles became a coach-driven franchise this offseason when they gave coach Chip Kelly all-encompassing power. Howie Roseman lost his title of general manager, which included authority over the draft.

The Cowboys have operated the other way since Johnson left in 1994, with owner Jones also carrying the GM title and having final say. But most organizations split the duties between the general manager and the coach.

"I've never wanted the GM to have the authority to hire the coach," Texans owner Bob McNair says. "I think that puts too much power in the hands of the GM. That's still my responsibility. The GM and coach have to appreciate each other's responsibility. They have to understand how we operate, and that they've got to get along with each other and respect each other and listen to each other."



JOHN FOX

Peter Brouillet

The poster boys for a successful yet ultimately dysfunctional GM-coach pairing: Jerry Jones and Jimmy Johnson.

Breakups aren't always over power. Sometimes, like in Dallas with Jones and Johnson, it comes down to credit.

"Ego," says Angelo, who spent 11 seasons as the Bears' general manager. "That's what it is. It comes down to ego. Who's getting the credit? The funny thing is, there is so much credit to go around when you're winning. Everybody is getting the credit. But somebody always thinks they are getting the short straw. That's unfortunate, because great teams, great organizations win it. It's not a great coach or a great player or a great owner or a great general manager. It's a combination of all those things. When one feels like he should be treated more special than the others, that's when we have a problem."

The friction between Jon Gruden and Rich McKay began almost the moment the Buccaneers acquired the coach in a trade with the Raiders. The Bucs won a Super Bowl in their only full season together, but Gruden ripped McKay's personnel decisions and deactivated receiver Keyshawn Johnson. It led to a split in the middle of the 2003 season, with McKay leaving for a division rival, the Falcons, where he remains as their president/CEO.

Both Gruden and McKay continue to take the high road in discussing the fallout.

"It's as simple as one word — trust," McKay says. "I don't think you need to go too far beyond that word. If you trust each other and your agendas are the same — and they're always the same — then you have a great opportunity for success. As soon as it becomes clear to one of them, whether real or not, that there are different agendas, they can't necessarily trust them in the way their message is being conveyed to some other party — whether it's the media, another coach or whoever that may be — then you've got a problem. Trust has to be built. The way trust is built up is you work together, and you make concessions together. You don't go in and say, 'We've got to have this defensive end.' You go in and say, 'We want this defensive end. This is why I like him. This is the case for him.' Then, when I give you a counter-case, you've got to take that into account, and you have to reach a joint decision. Trust will go away if one or the two of you decides to become the unilateral decider of fact."

Sometimes the general manager and coach have different outlooks. Coaches, who generally don't last long with one team, have a goal of winning now. They rarely are promised next year. General managers, who often have longer leashes, might look more toward the future. They build with a long-term plan in mind.

"There are a lot of dynamics," Snead, the Rams' general manager, says. "...You're trying to come up with the best solution to a problem, so you talk through the different points of view. Often, it's the head coach going to his staff and the general manager going to his staff to get other points of view and trying to mesh those together to make the best decisions for the organization."

Most view the Steelers as the model organization. They have had only three head coaches since 1969, and since owner Dan Rooney gave up his general manager duties after the 1970 season, the Steelers have had only three general managers or de facto general managers.

Bill Walsh served as head coach/GM during his 10 years with the 49ers, winning three Super Bowls. In his book, Building a Champion, Walsh wrote of the relationship between general managers and coaches: "The advantage of having a coach and a general manager is obvious: You have two people with clearly defined responsibilities who can concentrate on their individual areas of expertise. There's certainly enough work for two men."

If the team wins, there's credit enough to go around, too.

Q+A with Larry Fitzgerald

During the season, Larry Fitzgerald is one of the best wide receivers in the NFL, having racked up numbers that approach Hall-of-Fame level. In the offseason, he is a globe-trotting thrill-seeker, taking delight in adventures that could kill him. We caught up with him early one morning on a rare day that he wasn't hitting a golf ball off of a mountain, jumping out of an airplane or eating something that sounds totally disgusting.

What's your favorite stadium to play in?
In terms of the prestige and the history, I love Green Bay. When you play there, it feels like something special has occurred. In terms of the ruckus and the craziness, Seattle.

Would 10-year-old Larry Fitzgerald, growing up in Minnesota, believe that grown-up Larry Fitzgerald would say something nice about Green Bay?
I'm not saying anything nice about Green Bay. Nothing. I don't say anything nice about anything that happens in Wisconsin besides the Wisconsin Dells and Erin Hills and Whistling Straits (highly rated golf courses). Besides that, there's nothing in Wisconsin that I really like.

Who is the toughest cornerback you've ever lined up against?
I've lined up against some really, really talented cornerbacks. The two that really pop out in my mind, when I was really young, they really gave me fits, were Aaron Glenn (a three-time Pro Bowler who played from 1994-2008) and Ty Law (a five-time Pro Bowler who played from 1995-2009). Both of them were savvy old veterans. I felt like they knew my route before I was even running it. But I was only 20 years old, too.

Who is the funniest DB you've played against?
Sam Madison (a four-time Pro Bowler who played from 1997 until 2008). He had this real high-pitched voice when he was talking to you (adopts falsetto voice) — "You ain't going to get off on me!" And he was talking nonstop, too.

Was he a guy who had read your bio and would pick on you for something specific?
Oh, yeah. He was very smart in terms of preparation for guys. He definitely knew the competition. He knew what was going to bother you, and he was going to take any competitive advantage he could get.

Let's say I have a magic wand, and I can grant you one attribute from any wide receiver in NFL history – Jerry Rice's work ethic, Megatron's size, Odell Beckham Jr.'s hands, whatever. What would you take?
I love (Baltimore Ravens wide receiver) Steve Smith's competitive fire. His spirit is just tenacious.

Who among the quarterbacks you have caught passes from throws the most catchable ball?
Oh, man. I hate comparing quarterbacks. But there's a reason Kurt Warner is going into the Hall of Fame in the next few years. Carson (Palmer) throws a very catchable ball as well.

Left: Tim Umphrey; Right: AP

I watched him in training camp the year he was named starter in Cincinnati. I had to rub my eyes. I swear he was throwing the ball 80 yards in the air. Was I seeing things?
No. Carson can throw it. He can make every throw that you need a quarterback to make. But he makes them with nice touch, too. He delivers the deep ball, but it feels like he's throwing a 5-yard pass to you.

You have 909 catches, 89 touchdowns and 12,151 receiving yards. You were the youngest receiver to get to 700, 800 and 900 receptions. Do you have career goals in mind for catches, yards and touchdowns?
I think 1,000 catches is pretty much the standard for greatness. If you look around, not many guys have done it. 1,000 catches, 100 touchdowns, and I'd say 13,000, 14,000 yards. That would solidify that you had a really solid career.

The Cardinals had a great first part of the season last year. What's it going to take for you guys to stop Seattle's run in the NFC West?
We're not a team that really looks at anybody else. We try to just take care of our business and do whatever we can to make sure we're having success. Last year, we got hit with a rash of injuries that were just epic. They really hurt us. We were just worn down by the end of the year. We're going to have guys back healthy.

How glad are you that you don't have to play against cornerback Patrick Peterson and free safety Tyrann Mathieu?
I line up against those guys more than I line up against anybody. Playing against them every day gets us ready. It might have actually given our receivers a competitive advantage.

You have two million Twitter followers (his Twitter handle is @LarryFitzgerald). You tweeted the other day, "My heart goes out to those in pain in Baltimore. Let's stop the violence and start the conversation #PeaceInBaltimore" Do you feel a responsibility as an athlete to use your platform to engage in social issues?
No, not at all. That's just my personal feeling on it. I comment here and there on things, let you know how I feel. I don't think I have a responsibility at all to do that. If I had one follower, I would have sent the same message.

What do you hope to accomplish with the Larry Fitzgerald First Down Fund?
I just want to be able to impact my community. There are so many people who are in need. God has blessed me with great opportunities to help people who are in need. I feel as though it's my responsibility — and it's the way I was raised — to try to help people who are in need.

Why do you travel the world?
It gives me great perspective. I really enjoy learning. There's no better way for me to learn than through experience. There's a quote that I read, I'm not sure who said it, but they said, "Travel is the only thing you can buy that actually makes you rich." This year, I went to Russia. It was right after one of their politicians was killed. Russian media was talking about how unsafe it was in Moscow, as a warning to Americans. I was over there with Andrei Kirilenko, who played basketball for many years in the NBA. He hosted me for my journey from St. Petersburg to Moscow. I couldn't have been more safe or enjoyed the experience more. I had a private tour of the Kremlin, walked around Red Square and saw all the World War II military buildings there. I like to see what the world has to offer. I just like to venture out.

Do you eat the local food when you go?
Oh, yeah. I'll try anything once. The only things that are a little dicey for me are some Asian dishes. Everywhere else, I'm pretty good.

What's the strangest-sounding thing to an American that you've eaten?
Monkey brains was definitely high up there on the list of really nasty things. I had snake blood, too. That was really interesting. I would never try it again.

What do monkey brains taste like?
You're so blown away that you're actually eating it that I can't recall what the taste was.

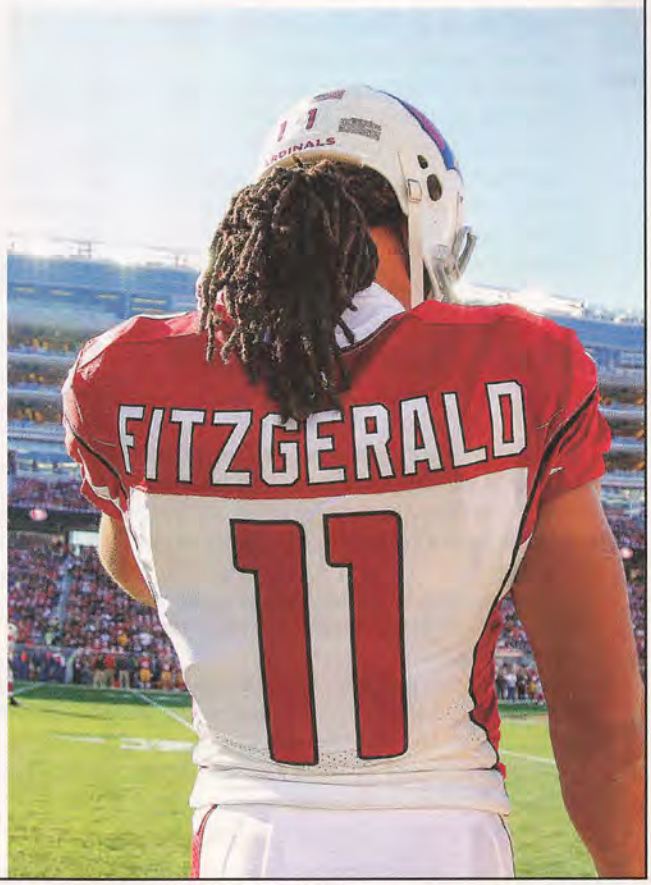
You played the longest par 3 in the world. It looked monstrous. Describe that.
I was at the Legends course in South Africa. They have a really nice course. They have a 19th hole that you have to take a helicopter up to get there and then back down to the green. It was a tough hole. My boy Andre Roberts (a former Cardinals wide receiver now with the Redskins) made a five on it. If the wind is into you, you don't have a chance of getting it there. I hit a really good drive, and I was still short. It's one of those things you read about and you just have to try it. Me being an avid golfer, it was definitely on my bucket list.

How long was it?
You're about 1,400 feet above the ground. The actual hole is 391 yards. It's a 22-second hang time — so from the time you hit the ball off the face of the club until it hits the green, it's 22 seconds in the air. You can imagine, if the wind is blowing into you, it's going to be really hard to get there. I can't tell you what I made on it because it's really embarrassing.

I will not grill you on that then.
Thank you.

Are you an adrenaline junkie?
I wouldn't say I'm an adrenaline junkie, but I'm not scared to do anything. I'm one of those people where if it's fun and it's exciting, I'm down for it. I'm kind of weird in my thinking: If it's something that will kill me immediately, I will do it for sure — bungee jumping, skydiving, all of those type of things. Something that will potentially just hurt me, and maybe shorten my NFL career, I won't do it. For instance, riding a motorcycle. Or cliff diving — I've done it before, but it hurts your feet. I would hate to break my foot doing something like that. But if it'll kill me immediately, I don't mind it.

Before you go do something like that, do you text the GM to warn him, or does he say, 'Man, I'd rather not know?'
They know I'm a junkie for that stuff. It's in my contract to do that stuff. It would be the least of my concerns if I was skydiving and my parachute didn't open. It's not like I'm going to be able to help Arizona Cardinals after that anyway.



NFL COACHING CAROUSEL

by John Gworek

CHICAGO BEARS – JOHN FOX

Previous Job: Head coach, Denver Broncos

Pros: It's not often that you get the opportunity to hire a coach who has taken two franchises to the Super Bowl. In 2002, Fox took over a 1–15 Panthers team that had the league's 31st-ranked defense and had them in the Super Bowl in two seasons. He took over the Broncos and the league's 32nd-ranked defense in 2011 coming off of a 4–12 season and had them in the Super Bowl in three seasons. Now he takes over the Bears and the league's 30th-ranked defense ... for some reason, this seems like a good fit.

Cons: Fox and the Broncos mutually parted ways. Fox's vision seemed to differ from that of team president John Elway, as Fox aimed for more balance on offense last season. So perhaps at this stage of his career, Fox isn't so concerned with playing nice with those around him.

Final Analysis: This is a good fit. Fox has proven that he's a quick fixer for struggling defenses, and while quarterback Jay Cutler is no Peyton Manning, there are pieces in place on offense. He may not win right away, but as the hand-picked coach of a new GM (Ryan Pace), Fox can take a couple years and build the team he wants.

ATLANTA FALCONS – DAN QUINN

Previous Job: Defensive coordinator, Seattle Seahawks

Pros: Quinn arrives after running the NFL's top defense each of the last two seasons in Seattle — exactly what the Falcons need after finishing dead last in defense in 2014 and tied for 27th in 2013. Quinn is known for effective game plans (see Super Bowl XLVIII vs. Peyton Manning) and finding the best way to use whatever players he has; good thing, because the Falcons don't have enough defensive talent to get by on talent alone.

Cons: Quinn has never been a head coach. Also, the Falcons were forced to wait until after the Super Bowl to hire him, which may have hindered his ability to put together the best possible staff.

Final Analysis: This was perhaps the most coveted open job, because Atlanta has a franchise quarterback already in place in Matt Ryan. For a first-time head coach like Quinn, that's huge, and he caught another break when respected offensive coordinator Kyle Shanahan parted ways with Cleveland. This is no long rebuild; expectations will be high for Quinn to fix the defense and win fast.

BUFFALO BILLS – REX RYAN

Previous Job: Head coach, New York Jets

Pros: The fact that a big name like Ryan was willing to take the job brings some credibility to a franchise that has missed the playoffs 15 straight seasons. The Bills want to win now, and hiring Ryan allows the team to play to its strength, specifically a defense that ranked fourth in the NFL in 2014. And Ryan has done it before, taking the Jets to two AFC title games with mediocre offenses.

Cons: Ryan went 26–38 his last four seasons in New York, and there is no evidence that he can improve the offense. The quarterback situation is among the worst in the league. No matter how much of a defensive genius Ryan is, he will have a hard time winning at a high level without some help from the offense.

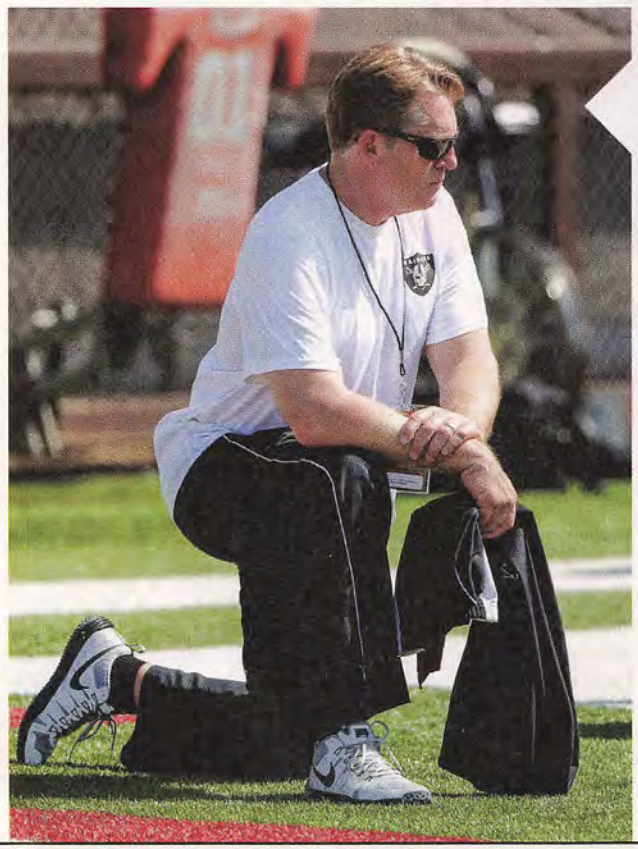
Final Analysis: Ryan arrives talking a good game, and there is every reason to believe that the Bills defense will again be dominant in 2015. The Bills also added playmakers on offense in LeSean McCoy and Percy Harvin. Quarterback is the elephant in the room, but there will be no honeymoon period. Ryan will be expected to win now.

AP

DENVER BRONCOS – GARY KUBIAK

Previous Job: Offensive coordinator, Baltimore Ravens

Pros: Kubiak returns to the only place he ever played, and the place where he served 11 seasons as offensive coordinator (1995-2005). There's little chance of him clashing with old friend John Elway, as John Fox apparently did at the end. And while he never won big in Houston, Kubiak had the expansion franchise competitive almost from the get-go and twice led the Texans to the playoffs. With Peyton Manning nearing the end, this was no time for a coach who had to learn on the job. Bringing defensive coordinator Wade Phillips along is huge: Houston's defenses ranked in the league's bottom third without Phillips; after Kubiak hired Phillips, the Texans' D ranked in the top 10 from 2011-13.



Cons: Kubiak's system — in which play-action is a big part of the passing game — doesn't exactly match with Manning standing in the shotgun, calling his own plays and getting the ball out quickly.

Final Analysis: The Broncos are not rebuilding — this is a Super-Bowl-or-bust team as long as Manning is around, so everyone needs to be pulling in the same direction. At the end of 2014, with coordinators angling for head coaching jobs (and Fox possibly already eyeing the Bears job), that wasn't happening. The window may be closing, but this gives the Broncos a chance to still sneak through it.

NEW YORK JETS – TODD BOWLES

Previous Job: Defensive coordinator, Arizona Cardinals

Pros: At the end of the Rex Ryan era in New York, no one was on the same page. The GM hadn't hired the coach but had drafted the quarterback with whom no one was happy. With new GM Mike Maccagnan picking Bowles as his guy, at least the Jets can start moving in the same direction. And Bowles didn't arrive making Super Bowl predictions; after a few years of Ryan's act, someone a little more low-key might be a welcome change.

Cons: Bowles has been coaching in the NFL since 2000 and even went 2–1 as Miami's interim head coach in 2011, but before the last two seasons in Arizona, he never even had his own defense to run. It's a big jump from that to being the face of the franchise in the Big Apple.

Final Analysis: Bowles was in the mix for other jobs, and he's obviously respected in the NFL. But unlike some of the guys on this list, he is not expected to win right away. The Jets cleaned house. Bowles and Maccagnan will have some time to rebuild the team in their image. Then again, it's still New York; the honeymoon won't last long.

OAKLAND RAIDERS – JACK DEL RIO

Previous Job: Defensive coordinator, Denver Broncos

Pros: Not counting interim coach Tony Sparano, the last four men to land the Raiders' top job were first-time head coaches. Compared to the likes of Lane Kiffin and Tom Cable, Del Rio is an accomplished head coach. He guided the Jaguars to the playoffs twice and had only one losing season in his first five years in Jacksonville.

Cons: For a guy who lasted almost nine full seasons at one job, Del Rio was not known for breeding stability. He fired 19 assistant coaches during his time in Jacksonville and earned a reputation for throwing players under the bus. His choices for coordinators also have done little to excite: In six seasons as an NFL offensive coordinator, Bill Musgrave has never led a unit that finished higher than 13th in yards or 14th in points per game. Then again, at least he has a track record. Ken Norton Jr. has never been a defensive coordinator before.

Final Analysis: Del Rio certainly has his detractors, but the Raiders did well to hire someone who has been around the block and enjoyed a little success as a head coach. But he has his work cut out for him, inheriting a team that finished last in total offense and gave up the most points in the league.

SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS – JIM TOMSULA

Previous Job: Defensive line coach, San Francisco 49ers

Pros: Tomsula was defensive line coach under the departed Jim Harbaugh, so he provides some familiarity and continuity. That's no small thing for a team that is one 8–8 season removed from three straight trips to the NFC title game and one Super Bowl run. General manager Trent Baalke built those teams but clashed with Harbaugh, so it was important — to him at least — to hire a coach who was not looking for total control.

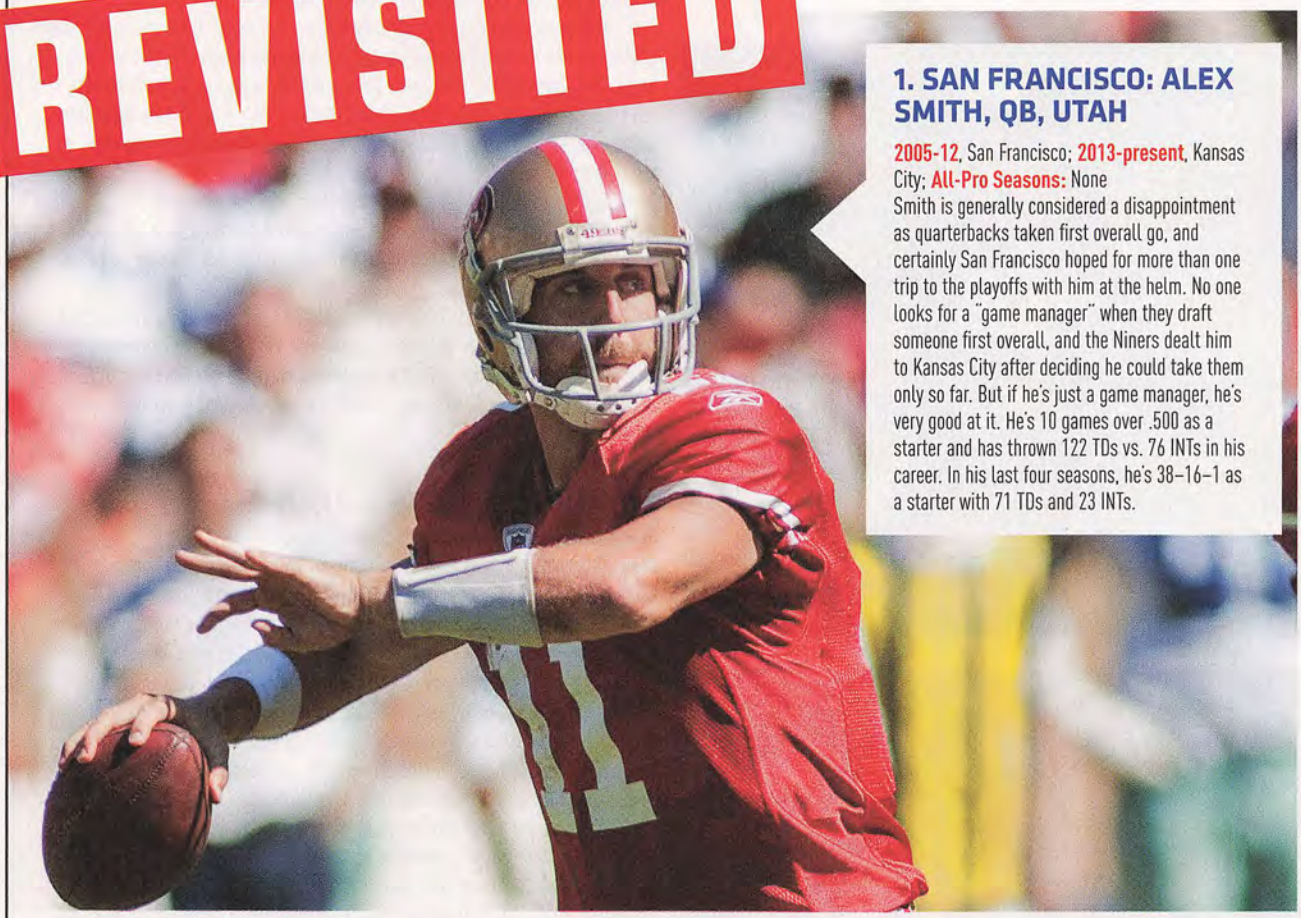
Cons: Tomsula has one game of NFL head coaching experience, the 2010 finale after Mike Singletary was fired. He's never been an NFL coordinator. How much continuity does Tomsula really bring given that most of Harbaugh's staff is no longer around?

Final Analysis: Was 2014 just a speed bump? If the rest of the operation is so strong that it can withstand some first-time-head-coach growing pains, Tomsula may work out just fine. But if 2014 was the beginning of a downward cycle — as many believe — it's unlikely Tomsula will be the guy leading the eventual rebuild.

2005 DRAFT REVISITED

Four members of the undefeated 2004 Auburn Tigers team highlighted a first round that yielded mixed results – at best – over the long term

by John Gworek



1. SAN FRANCISCO: ALEX SMITH, QB, UTAH

2005-12, San Francisco; 2013-present, Kansas City; All-Pro Seasons: None

Smith is generally considered a disappointment as quarterbacks taken first overall go, and certainly San Francisco hoped for more than one trip to the playoffs with him at the helm. No one looks for a "game manager" when they draft someone first overall, and the Niners dealt him to Kansas City after deciding he could take them only so far. But if he's just a game manager, he's very good at it. He's 10 games over .500 as a starter and has thrown 122 TDs vs. 76 INTs in his career. In his last four seasons, he's 38–16–1 as a starter with 71 TDs and 23 INTs.

2. MIAMI: RONNIE BROWN, RB, AUBURN

2005-10, Miami; 2011, Philadelphia; 2012-14, San Diego; 2014, Houston

All-Pro Seasons: None

Ten years later, it's hard to believe that three running backs came off the board in the first five picks in 2005. Brown was the first, and he looked like the complete package coming out of Auburn. After averaging about 1,200 yards from scrimmage in his first two seasons, Brown was leading the league in that department in 2007 when he blew out his knee making a tackle on an interception return. While he made a Pro Bowl after rushing for 916 yards and 10 touchdowns in 2008, Brown was never again a feature back. He has started just three games since 2010, and his career may be over after he carried just 20 times in 10 games with San Diego and Houston in 2014.

3. CLEVELAND: BRAYLON EDWARDS, WR, MICHIGAN

2005-09, Cleveland; 2009-10, N.Y. Jets; 2011, San Francisco; 2012, N.Y. Jets; 2012, Seattle

All-Pro Seasons: None

Much like Brown, Edwards seemed to be developing nicely when he made the Pro Bowl in his third season thanks to 1,289 yards and 16 touchdowns (both franchise records) on 80 catches. But it was all downhill from there for Edwards, who kept finding himself in off-field trouble with the Browns. Four games into the 2009 season, he was traded to the Jets two days after allegedly punching a man in a nightclub. In 2010, his one full season with the Jets, Edwards had 53 catches for 904 yards and seven touchdowns. In 2011-12, he bounced from the 49ers to the Seahawks and back to the Jets, but he caught just 33 passes in 22 games along the way. He hasn't played in the NFL since.

4. CHICAGO: CEDRIC BENSON, RB, TEXAS

2005-07, Chicago; 2008-11, Cincinnati; 2012, Green Bay; All-Pro Seasons: None

Benson got off to a rough start in Chicago as he didn't sign a contract until he had missed all of training camp, and he found himself stuck behind Thomas Jones for two seasons as a result. When he finally got the starting job in 2007, his season was cut short by an ankle injury, and he was released before the 2008 season. Benson found success in Cincinnati, rushing for 4,176 yards and scoring 22 TDs over the next four seasons, including three straight 1,000-yard seasons. But he was high-maintenance, and the Bengals tired of his pouting when the ball wasn't coming his way. After signing with Green Bay in 2012, Benson played just five games before suffering what turned out to be a career-ending foot injury.

Smith: Peter Brouillet; Williams: Mark Langello; Williamson: Brian Ebner

5. TAMPA BAY: CADILLAC WILLIAMS, RB, AUBURN

2005-10, Tampa Bay; 2011, St. Louis; All-Pro Seasons: None

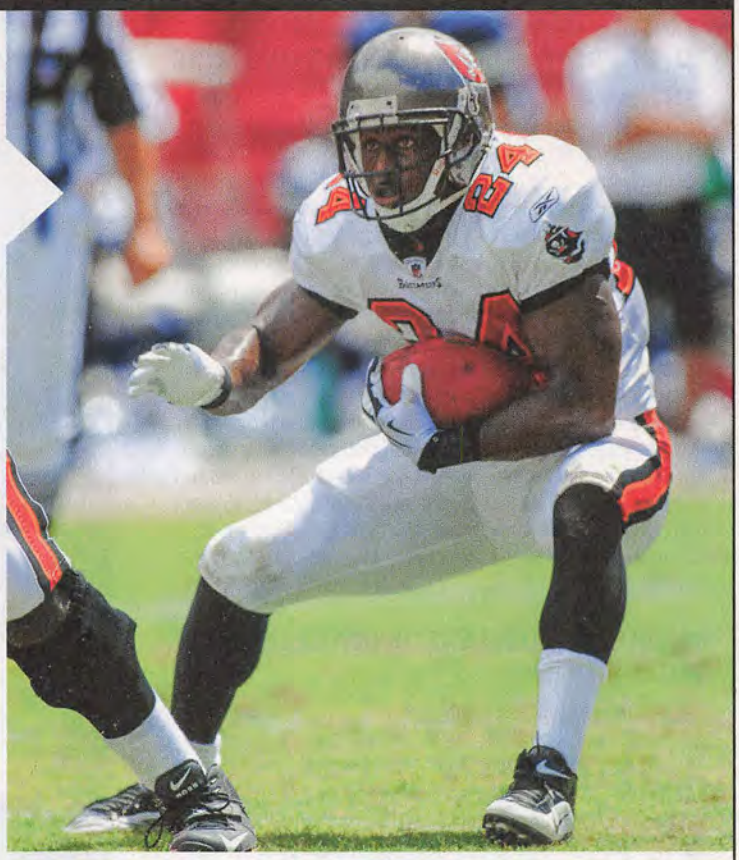
Williams got off to a slightly faster start than his fellow backs picked in the top five, but his career came to a similar end. After rushing for nearly 1,200 yards and six touchdowns in 14 games as a rookie, Williams never again averaged 4.0 yards per carry for the Bucs and missed 26 games in his first four seasons due to injury. While he finally played in every game for Tampa Bay in 2009-10, his rushing totals in those seasons combined barely matched his rookie season. He moved on to St. Louis, gaining 361 yards in 12 games in 2011 before calling it a career.



6. TENNESSEE: ADAM JONES, CB, WEST VIRGINIA

2005-06, Tennessee; 2008, Dallas; 2010-present, Cincinnati

All-Pro Seasons: 1 (2014, as a kick returner)

Jones arrived with all kinds of off-the-field red flags, and he justified all the concern early in his career. After a breakout season that featured three punt returns for touchdowns in 2006, Jones was suspended by the NFL for the 2007 season for violation of the league's personal conduct policy. He signed with the Dallas Cowboys in 2008 but appeared in only nine games before spending 2009 with the Winnipeg Blue Bombers of the CFL. He returned to the NFL in 2010 in Cincinnati, and he's been with the Bengals ever since. After two injury-riddled seasons, Jones has played in every game since 2012 and was an All-Pro kick returner in 2014.

7. MINNESOTA: TROY WILLIAMSON, WR, SOUTH CAROLINA

2005-07, Minnesota; 2008-09, Jacksonville; All-Pro Seasons: None

Williamson was a surprising choice at this point because he was never a truly dominant receiver in college at South Carolina. He did have a nice senior season, averaging nearly 20 yards per catch on 43 receptions, but this was the pick the Vikings got from the Raiders for Randy Moss. That alone put pressure on Williamson to produce. It never happened. In three seasons, Williamson started 22 games, catching 79 passes for 1,067 yards and three touchdowns. He was traded to Jacksonville for a sixth-round pick, and was out of football two years later.

8. ARIZONA: ANTREL ROLLE, DB, MIAMI (FLA.)

2005-09, Arizona; 2010-14, N.Y. Giants; All-Pro Seasons: None

Finally, eight picks in, we get to a player who panned out as one might expect. Rolle's rookie season was cut short by a knee injury, but he's played 143 of 144 games since. He moved from corner to safety and made the Pro Bowl in 2009, only to be released by Arizona after the season for financial reasons. He landed on his feet with the Giants, making two more Pro Bowls in his five seasons and helping them win Super Bowl XLVI. His contract expired after the 2014 season, and Rolle signed with the Bears in free agency.

9. WASHINGTON: CARLOS ROGERS, DB, AUBURN

2005-10, Washington; 2011-13, San Francisco; 2014, Oakland

All-Pro Seasons: None

The third Auburn Tiger taken among the first nine picks, Rogers has had a solid if unspectacular career. After starting 68 of 78 games in six years with Washington, he signed with San Francisco in 2011 and promptly made the Pro Bowl, picking off a career-high six passes and helping the 49ers advance to the NFC title game. All told, he started all 48 games he played for the Niners in three seasons as they went 36–11–1, losing the NFC title game twice and the Super Bowl once. Rogers signed a one-year deal with the Raiders in 2014 but played only seven games due to injury.

10. DETROIT: MIKE WILLIAMS, WR, USC

2005-06, Detroit; 2007, Tennessee; 2007, Oakland; 2010-11, Seattle;
All-Pro Seasons: None

Williams put up video game numbers in two seasons at USC (176 rec., 2,579 yards, 30 TDs), but after that it was one disappointment after another. He declared for the 2004 Draft as a true sophomore after a judge ruled the NFL couldn't stop Ohio State's Maurice Clarett from doing the same. Williams went so far as to hire an agent, which made him ineligible to return to USC when a higher court overturned the decision. So he had to sit out a whole season waiting for the 2005 Draft. Despite posting huge numbers in college, there were questions about him right away, as his weight and 40 time were closer to those of a tight end. Then he got picked by the Lions, who had taken receivers (Charles Rogers, Roy Williams) in the first round of the previous two drafts. Unfortunately, Williams did nothing to prove the Lions did the right thing. He caught 37 passes in two seasons before splitting 2007 between Tennessee and Oakland. After two years out of the NFL, he had his best season with Seattle in 2010 (65 rec., 751 yards), but he's been out of the league since struggling in 2011. In the end, his USC numbers dwarfed his NFL career numbers (127 rec., 1,526 yards, five TDs in 56 games).

11. DALLAS: DEMARCUS WARE, DE/LB, TROY

2005-13, Dallas; 2014-present, Denver
All-Pro Seasons: 4 (2007, '08, '09, '11)

Ware is the most decorated player in this first round (eight Pro Bowls, four-time All-Pro) and has been remarkably durable and consistent. In 10 seasons (nine with Dallas, one with Denver), he's missed only three games, starting 155 of 157. He led the NFL in sacks twice (2008 and 2010) and failed to reach double-digits in sacks only once since his rookie season. Heading into 2015, he ranks third among active players with 127.0 sacks (Jared Allen, 134.0; John Abraham, 133.5).

12. SAN DIEGO: SHAWNE MERRIMAN, LB, MARYLAND

2005-10, San Diego; 2010-12, Buffalo; All-Pro Seasons: 1 (2006)

Merriman burst onto the NFL scene quickly, making the Pro Bowl and earning Defensive Rookie of the Year honors with 10 sacks in 2005. In 2006, he was suspended for four games for violating the league's performance-enhancing drug policy, but he still led the league with 17 sacks in 12 games. He made his third Pro Bowl in a row with 12.5 sacks in 2007, but it was all downhill from there. In 2008, he couldn't shake a preseason knee injury and had season-ending surgery after the opener. He returned to play 14 games in 2009 but registered only four sacks. He was cut after three games in 2010 and signed with Buffalo, only to injure his Achilles in his first practice and miss the rest of the season. The injury nagged him for two more seasons, and he recorded just 2.0 sacks in 15 games with the Bills in 2011-12. He's been out of the league since.

13. NEW ORLEANS: JAMMAL BROWN, OT, OKLAHOMA

2005-08, New Orleans; 2010-12, Washington; All-Pro Seasons: 1 (2006)

Brown won the Outland Trophy as the nation's top lineman and was a unanimous All-American for Oklahoma in 2004, as he helped pave the way for Adrian Peterson's huge freshman season. The Saints made him the highest selection for an OU offensive linemen since 1950, and he rewarded them with an All-Pro season in 2006 and another Pro Bowl in 2008. He missed the 2009 season with a torn ACL and was traded to Washington before the 2010 season. He started 26 of 28 games over the next two seasons before a hip injury sidelined him for the 2012 season. He never played in the NFL again.

14. CAROLINA: THOMAS DAVIS, LB, GEORGIA

2005-present, Carolina; All-Pro Seasons: None

Davis has never made a Pro Bowl let alone been an All-Pro, but he might be the best story of the 2005 Draft. After playing safety at Georgia and mostly on special teams as a rookie, Davis started 46 games at linebacker for the Panthers from 2006-08. Then he tore the ACL in his right knee three times in the next three years, appearing in only nine games from 2009-11. Incredibly, Davis returned in 2012 and had perhaps his two best seasons in 2013-14, recording 240 tackles and 6.5 sacks. After the 2014 season, he was named the Walter Payton NFL Man of the Year.

15. KANSAS CITY: DERRICK JOHNSON, LB, TEXAS

2005-present, Kansas City; All-Pro Seasons: 1 (2011)

After playing all but six games as a solid starter in his first six seasons, Johnson saw his star rise in 2011. He was named to his first Pro Bowl and was first-team All-Pro after racking up 131 tackles, 2.0 sacks and two interceptions. He followed that up with two more Pro Bowl seasons in 2012-13 and was primed for another when he went down in the 2014 opener against Tennessee. He missed the rest of the season with a torn Achilles.

Ware: Peter Brouillet; Johnson: Courtland W. Richards

16. HOUSTON: TRAVIS JOHNSON, DT, FLORIDA STATE

2005-08, Houston; 2009-10, San Diego; All-Pro Seasons: None

Johnson had an underwhelming college career until his big senior season. He was named All-ACC after recording 2.5 sacks and 18 tackles for a loss and rose up draft boards. Alas, his early college career was a better indicator of what was to come. Bothered by injuries, Johnson started 37 games in four seasons with Houston before being traded to San Diego for a sixth-round pick before the 2009 season. He appeared in just 22 games for the Chargers before finishing his career with just three sacks in 76 games.

17. CINCINNATI: DAVID POLLACK, LB, GEORGIA

2005-06, Cincinnati; All-Pro Seasons: None

If Thomas Davis is the best story of this first round, Pollack is perhaps the most tragic from a football standpoint. He was the SEC Defensive Player of the Year in 2004 when he won the Bednarik Award, the Hendricks Award, the Lombardi Award and the Lott Trophy. Making the move from college defensive end to pro linebacker, he started five games as a rookie for the Bengals and recorded 4.5 sacks. He added another sack in the playoffs. In the second game of the 2006 season, Pollack broke a vertebra in his neck making a tackle and missed the remainder of the season. While he suffered no paralysis, the injury was career-ending. Pollack is now best known for his work as a college football analyst for ESPN.

18. MINNESOTA: ERASMUS JAMES, DE, WISCONSIN

2005-07, Minnesota; 2008, Washington; All-Pro Seasons: None

After an All-Big Ten and All-America senior season for the Badgers, James got off to a promising start in Minnesota. He started nine of 15 games as a rookie, recording 28 tackles and 4.0 sacks, including two against Pittsburgh in December. But then he was hit by injuries and recorded just one sack in eight games over the next two seasons. He was traded to Washington in 2008 and played the final five games of his career that season for the Redskins, failing to make a tackle.

19. ST. LOUIS: ALEX BARRON, OT, FLORIDA STATE

2005-09, St. Louis; 2010, Dallas; All-Pro Seasons: None

Barron arrived as a unanimous All-American and Outland Trophy finalist at Florida State, and he started 11 of the 12 games he played as a rookie. He started 63 of 64 games for the Rams over the next four seasons, but he developed a reputation as one of the most-penalized linemen in the league. He was traded to Dallas in 2010 and started the season opener for the Cowboys. But a holding penalty on him negated what would have been the game-winning touchdown on the game's final play, and he never started another game. Barron attempted comebacks with New Orleans, Seattle and Oakland over the next three seasons but never played again.

20. DALLAS: MARCUS SPEARS, DE, LSU

2005-12, Dallas; 2013, Baltimore; All-Pro Seasons: None

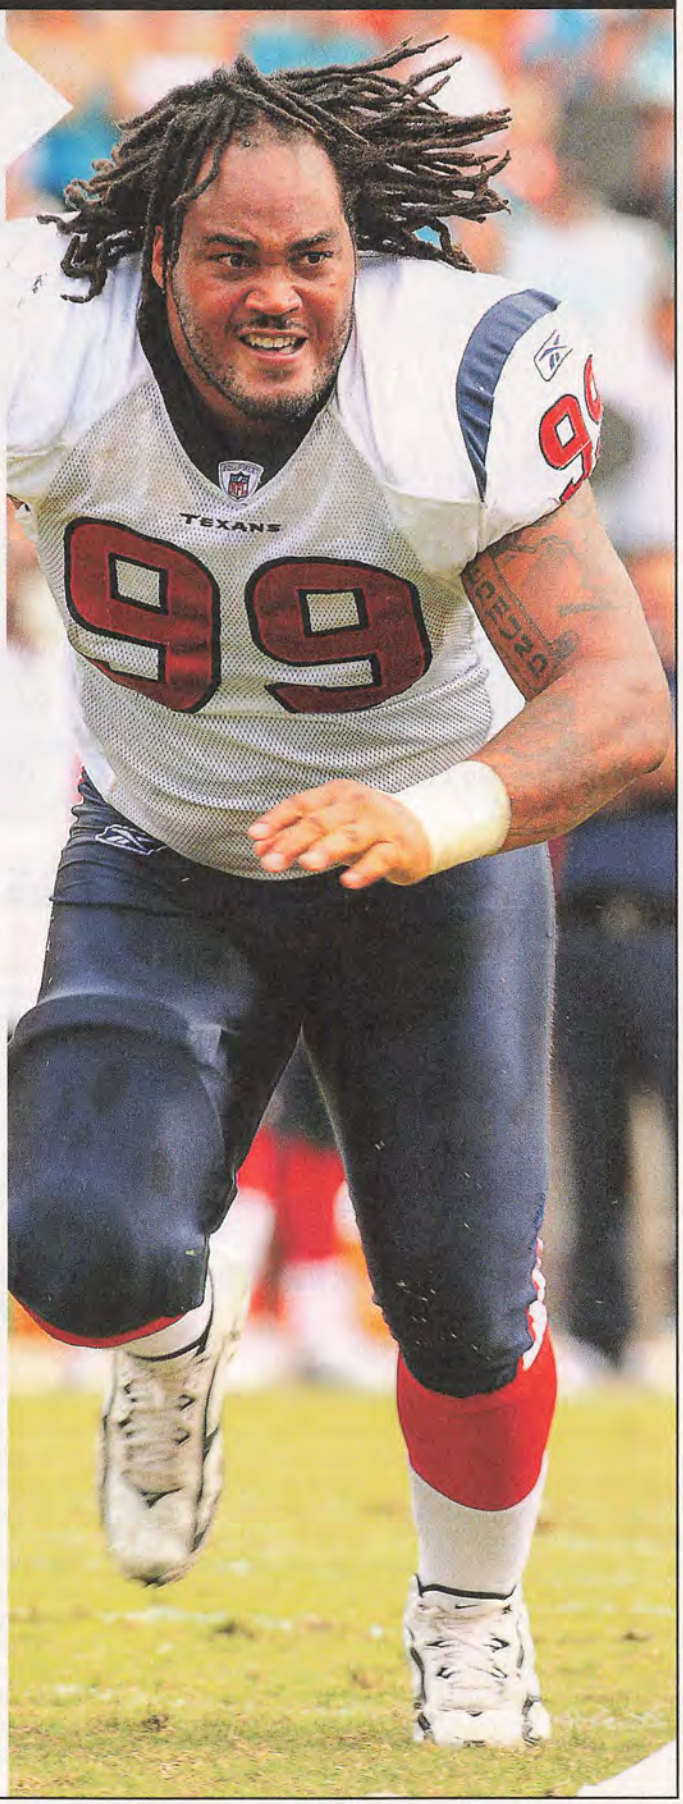
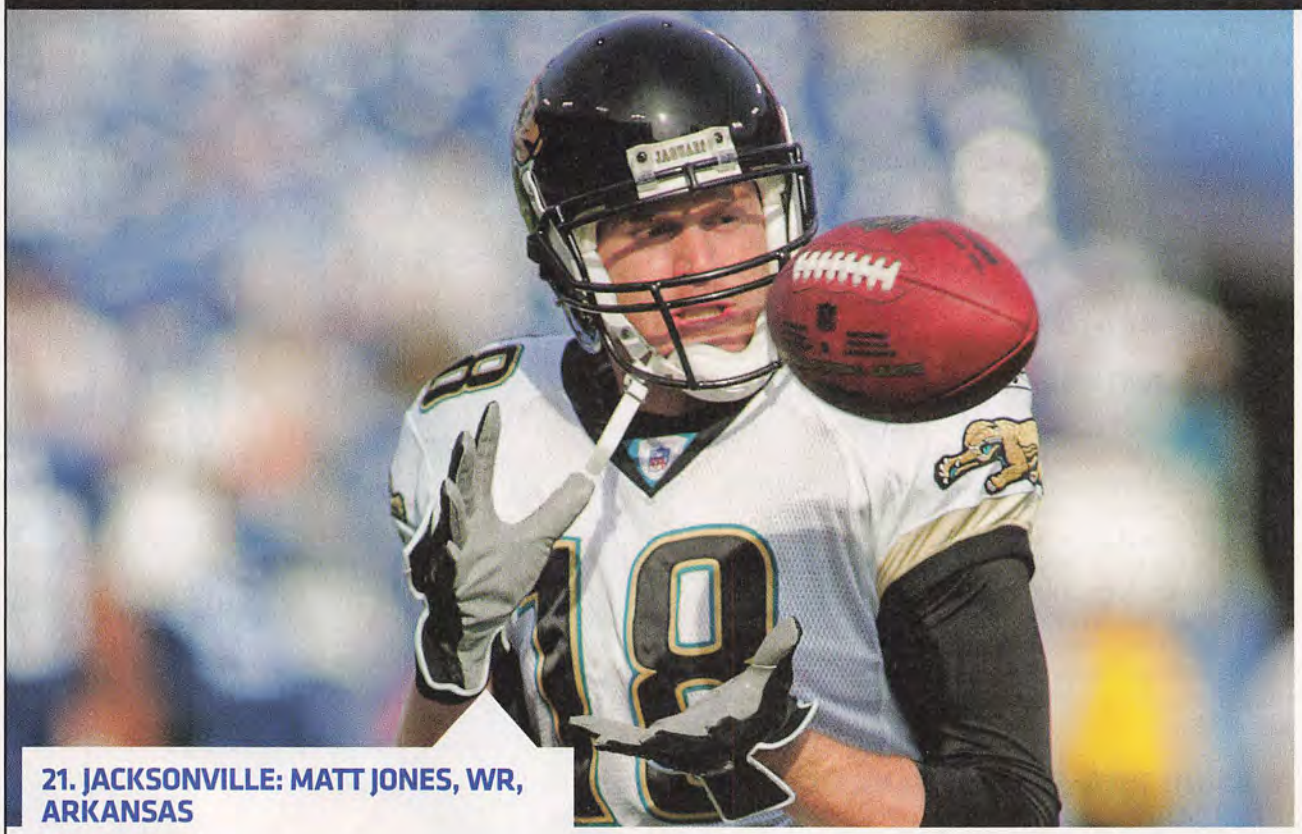
Much was made of the fact that Bill Parcells wanted to take Spears with the No. 11 pick because he was a perfect fit for his 3-4 defense. Jerry Jones went with DeMarcus Ware, gambling that Spears would still be on the board at No. 20. Jones was right, but Parcells wasn't wrong about Spears being a good fit. He started 89 of 119 games over eight seasons with the Cowboys, but his role diminished as the team moved away from the 3-4 set and injuries took their toll. He signed with Baltimore before the 2013 season but was released after playing five games.





21. JACKSONVILLE: MATT JONES, WR, ARKANSAS

2005-08, Jacksonville
All-Pro Seasons: None

Jones was a successful dual-threat quarterback at Arkansas, throwing for 5,857 yards and 53 touchdowns and rushing for 2,535 yards and 24 more scores in his collegiate career. But when NFL teams saw his 4.3 speed to go with a 6'6", 240-pound frame, he shot up draft boards as a wide receiver prospect. Despite being new to the position, he caught 77 passes for 1,075 yards and nine touchdowns in his first two seasons. Jones slumped in 2007 and was arrested for cocaine possession before the 2008 season; yet he responded with his best year, catching 65 passes for 761 yards and two touchdowns. But after being jailed for violating his plea agreement from the cocaine arrest, he was released by the Jaguars in March 2009. He signed with Cincinnati but was released before the season and never played again in the NFL.

22. BALTIMORE: MARK CLAYTON, WR, OKLAHOMA

2005-09, Baltimore; 2010-11, St. Louis
All-Pro Seasons: None

Clayton may have been taken higher had he declared for the draft after his monster 2003 season. After catching 83 passes for 1,425 yards and 15 TDs, helping quarterback Jason White win the Heisman Trophy, Clayton was not quite able to match those numbers in 2004 with 66 catches for 876 yards and eight touchdowns. Still, he had a promising rookie season in 2005 (44 rec., 471 yards) and led the Ravens in receiving yards in 2006 as he clicked with quarterback Steve McNair, catching 67 passes for 939 yards and five touchdowns. Those numbers, however, turned out to be career highs, as McNair played just six games in 2007. Without McNair, Clayton never established himself as anything more than a third receiving option and was traded to the Rams right before the 2010 opener. He caught 23 passes that season in a reserve role, but he appeared in just two games in 2011. He officially retired in 2013.

23. OAKLAND: FABIAN WASHINGTON, DB, NEBRASKA

2005-07, Oakland; 2008-10, Baltimore
All-Pro Seasons: None

Washington was a three-year starter at Nebraska but lacked the postseason honors racked up by some other prospects drafted in this first round. What he did have, however, was speed — 4.29 speed in the 40, to be precise — so it's no surprise he caught the eye of the Raiders. Like many first-round picks for whom Oakland reached after being seduced by their speed, Washington never put it all together in the NFL. He started 25 of 30 games in his first two seasons in Oakland, intercepting four passes. After starting just three of 15 games in 2007, he was traded to Baltimore for a fourth-round pick. He started 30 games over the next three seasons for the Ravens, intercepting one pass, before joining the Saints in training camp in 2011. He injured his hamstring, was released off injured reserve in September and never played again.

24. GREEN BAY: AARON RODGERS, QB, CALIFORNIA

2005-present, Green Bay
All-Pro Seasons: 2 (2011, '14)

There was some debate leading up to the draft about Rodgers being perhaps the best quarterback coming out and a possible No. 1 overall pick. But when the 49ers went with Alex Smith, Rodgers fell further than anyone expected. Perhaps he was hurt by the fact that previous passers who played their college ball under Jeff Tedford had not fared well in the NFL, or the fact that he played only two seasons at Cal after junior college; whatever the case, many thought he would need time to adjust to the pro game. With Brett Favre still going strong, the Packers were in position to give him that time. After three years as Favre's understudy, Rodgers took over and has not looked back. All he's done in seven seasons is go 76–38 as the starter (including playoffs) with two All-Pro selections and two NFL MVP Awards. He was named MVP of Super Bowl XLV. Other than a seven-game stretch in 2013 after he broke his collarbone, he's started every meaningful game in his seven seasons since taking over. In his six full seasons, he is averaging 4,286 yards, 35 touchdowns and eight interceptions. While those three seasons of waiting will prevent him from challenging Favre's Green Bay records, he's the surest bet from this list to make his way to the Hall of Fame.

Jones: Tim Clark/Athlon Sports; Campbell: Bruce Schwartzman

25. WASHINGTON: JASON CAMPBELL, QB, AUBURN

2005-09, Washington; 2010-11, Oakland; 2012, Chicago; 2013, Cleveland; 2014-present, Cincinnati; All-Pro Seasons: None

After taking his Auburn teammate Carlos Rogers earlier, Washington traded back into the first round to grab Campbell. Still, the Redskins had Mark Brunell and didn't rush Campbell, and he failed to attempt a pass for a season-and-a-half before being named the starter for the final seven games of 2006. Despite a 2–5 record, Campbell showed some promise and spent the next three seasons as the Washington starter. But after a 4–12 season in 2009, Campbell was traded to Oakland. After starting 12 games for the Raiders in 2010, Campbell has settled into the role of veteran backup, going 4–2 for the Raiders in 2011 and then bouncing to Chicago (2012) to Cleveland (2013) to Cincinnati (2014). While he never proved to be the franchise quarterback all teams want in the first round, he has provided a nice security blanket as a career 60.3 percent passer who has thrown more touchdowns than interceptions (87-to-60 ratio).

26. SEATTLE: CHRIS SPENCER, OL, OLE MISS

2005-10, Seattle; 2011-12, Chicago; 2013-14, Tennessee
All-Pro Seasons: None

Projected as a late second-round pick as a center, Spencer snuck into the first round when Seattle grabbed him, and he saw action in seven games as a rookie. After starting 13 games at left guard in 2006, Spencer took over for retiring center Robbie Tobeck in 2007. After three seasons starting at the spot and another at right guard, Spencer signed with Chicago and started 14 games in 2011 at right guard. After he started just five games in 2012, he signed with Tennessee and served as the Titans' backup center, starting six of 32 games in 2013-14. He has yet to sign a contract for 2015.

27. ATLANTA: RODDY WHITE, WR, UAB

All-Pro Seasons: 1 (2010)

It took White a couple years to adjust to the NFL, but once he did he became one of the league's most consistent weapons. After catching 59 passes for 952 yards in his first two seasons combined, White exploded for 83 catches and 1,202 yards in 2007. Then quarterback Matt Ryan arrived, and White really took off. Despite missing a handful of games the last two seasons and the emergence of Julio Jones, White has averaged 89 catches for 1,172 yards since Ryan arrived. His 115 catches in 2010 led the NFL, and he went to four straight Pro Bowls from 2008-11. He is the most prolific receiver in Falcons history with 765 career catches for 10,357 yards and 62 touchdowns.

28. SAN DIEGO: LUIS CASTILLO, DT, NORTHWESTERN

2005-11, San Diego; All-Pro Seasons: None

Castillo made headlines before he was even drafted when he admitted he used steroids in an effort to get healthy for the NFL Combine. San Diego took a shot on Castillo anyway, and it paid off quickly as Castillo started 15 games as a rookie. He was named to several all-rookie teams after recording a career-high 49 tackles and 3.5 sacks. In 2006, he played just 10 games due to injury but recorded 7.0 sacks. A knee injury limited him to 10 games again in 2007, and it seemed to rob him of his explosiveness. While he started 45 of the Chargers' 48 games from 2008-10, he totaled just six more sacks in those three seasons to bring his career total to 19.0. He never matched his rookie tackles total, and his career ended in the 2011 opener when he suffered a broken leg.

29. INDIANAPOLIS: MARLIN JACKSON, CB, MICHIGAN

2005-09, Indianapolis; All-Pro Seasons: None

Jackson was a part-time starter for the Colts in his first two seasons, but he got a boost when he picked off Tom Brady in the final minute of the 2006 AFC title game to seal a trip to the Super Bowl for the Colts. He started every game the following season for the defending champs and was solid if unspectacular with 87 tackles, two fumble recoveries and one interception. He started the first seven games of 2008 before injuring his knee in practice, and he was never the same. He returned to play in four games in 2009, intercepting one pass, but that was it for his Indianapolis career. He signed a two-year deal with Philadelphia in 2010 with the idea of moving to safety, but he blew out his Achilles in minicamp and never played a down for the Eagles.

30. PITTSBURGH: HEATH MILLER, TE, VIRGINIA

2005-present, Pittsburgh; All-Pro Seasons: None

Originally a quarterback when he arrived at Virginia for college, Miller left as a unanimous first-team All-American. In an era of tight ends becoming more like wide receivers, Miller has become one of the most beloved Steelers by being an all-around tight end who can block as well as run and catch. A reliable target for Ben Roethlisberger, Miller has played in at least 14 games in each of his 10 seasons, racking up 532 catches for 6,034 yards and 43 touchdowns. He's a two-time Pro Bowl selection.

31. PHILADELPHIA: MIKE PATTERSON, DT, USC

2005-12, Philadelphia; 2013-14, N.Y. Giants; All-Pro Seasons: None

Patterson helped USC win two national titles and was an All-American before arriving in Philadelphia. After starting seven games as a rookie and recording 3.5 sacks, Patterson claimed a spot in the starting lineup and was entrenched there for the next six seasons. While he never made a Pro Bowl, he was durable (missing only two games in those six seasons) and plugged the middle while picking up 13 more sacks. He began suffering from seizures in training camp in 2011. He played that season but missed most of the 2012 season after brain surgery. He was released and signed with the Giants, starting nine games in 2013-14 and picking up 50 tackles. He is unsigned for 2015.

32. NEW ENGLAND: LOGAN MANKINS, OL, FRESNO STATE

2005-13, New England; 2014-present, Tampa Bay, All-Pro Seasons: 1 (2010)

Mankins was an All-WAC selection at Fresno State after not allowing a sack as a left tackle his senior season. He was moved to left guard by the Patriots and didn't miss a beat, starting every game for his first five seasons and twice making the Pro Bowl. He held out for the first seven games of 2010, but when he returned he played well enough to be named first-team All-Pro and make his third Pro Bowl. After three more Pro Bowl seasons, Mankins was traded to Tampa Bay in late August 2014. He started every game for the Buccaneers last season.

QUARTERBACK CLASS OF 2015

Only seven signal callers were selected this year, marking the fewest since 1955. This year, Heisman Trophy winners Jameis Winston and Marcus Mariota stole the show before the QB class nearly flat-lined.

Jameis Winston

Florida State (Buccaneers, 1st overall)

As controversial as he is charismatic, Winston won a national title and posted a 26–1 record with eight second-half comebacks during his two seasons as the starter at Florida State. Famous Jameis stays within the Sunshine State and Seminole fanbase, becoming the first QB taken No. 1 overall by the Buccaneers since Miami's Heisman Trophy-winning Vinny Testaverde in 1987.

1-2 Punch

Winston and Mariota became just the sixth QB duo to be drafted 1-2 since the NFL-AFL merger. Regardless of how their careers play out, however, Winston and Mariota are scheduled to make their NFL debuts in a head-to-head Tennessee at Tampa Bay Week 1 matchup. Historically, it's a split decision on passers picked one and two.

2012 Andrew Luck, Stanford (Colts, 1st)
Robert Griffin III, Baylor (Redskins, 2nd)
RG3 won the Heisman Trophy and Offensive Rookie of the Year awards, but his rival Luck has emerged as an MVP candidate and ogre-bearded offensive juggernaut.

1999 Tim Couch, Kentucky (Browns, 1st)
Donovan McNabb, Syracuse (Eagles, 2nd)
The Bengals drafted Oregon's Akili Smith third for a 1-2-3 QB class. Couch and Smith busted; McNabb made five NFC title games and lost Super Bowl XXXIX.

1998 Peyton Manning, Tennessee (Colts, 1st)
Ryan Leaf, Washington State (Chargers, 2nd)
It's easy to forget how close this debate was. (ESPN The Magazine predicted Leaf, not Manning, would be a Hall of Famer.) Manning has five MVPs and a Super Bowl MVP; Leaf threw 14 career TDs.

1993 Drew Bledsoe, Washington State (Patriots, 1st)
Rick Mirer, Notre Dame (Seahawks, 2nd)
Bledsoe led the Pats to an AFC title but has since become the answer to the trivia question: "Who is the quarterback Tom Brady replaced?" Mirer was mired down by bad teams and the "next Joe Montana" label.

1971 Jim Plunkett, Stanford (Patriots, 1st)
Archie Manning, Ole Miss (Saints, 2nd)
Plunkett is the only eligible two-time Super Bowl-winning QB not in the Hall of Fame. Archie ran for his life in NOLA while raising two future No. 1-pick Super Bowl MVP sons.

Marcus Mariota, Oregon (Titans, 2nd)

The humble Hawaiian is a freak athlete — running a 4.52 in the 40-yard dash and skying for a 36-inch vertical leap after weighing in at 6'4" and 222 pounds at the NFL Combine. Instead of being reunited with former college coach Chip Kelly in Philadelphia, Mariota becomes Tennessee's third top-10 pick at quarterback in 10 years, following in the footsteps of Vince Young (3rd, 2006) and Jake Locker (8th, 2011). Aloha, y'all.

Garrett Grayson, Colorado State (Saints, 75th)

Grayson is next in line to the throne of Who Dat Nation, as ageless wonder and regional treasure Drew Brees enters his age-36 season in the Big Easy.

Sean Mannion, Oregon State (Rams, 89th)

Mannion has the size (6'6", 229) and also the pedigree, having been schooled in a pro-style offense by former NFL coach Mike Riley at Oregon State.

Bryce Petty, Baylor (Jets, 103rd)

Two years after taking West Virginia's Geno Smith in the second round, Gang Green has added another young arm to the mix. Petty posted video-game numbers at Baylor.

Brett Hundley, UCLA (Packers, 147th)

There's a history of former Packer backups who leave Green Bay and become starters somewhere outside of Title Town (see: Matt Hasselbeck, Aaron Brooks).

Trevor Siemian, Northwestern (Broncos, 250th)

Siemian should become a human sponge, absorbing everything he possibly can from Peyton Manning and John Elway in Denver.

Winston: Tom DiPace; Graham: Kyle Lanzer; Unger: AP

TRADE COMMODITIES

Incoming rookies hog all of the attention on draft weekend. But there are plenty of impact veterans who were traded as part of deals that included 2015 draft picks. When thinking about a team's draft haul, don't forget these valuable assets.

Seahawks acquire: Jimmy Graham, TE + 112th pick Saints acquire: Max Unger, C + 31st pick

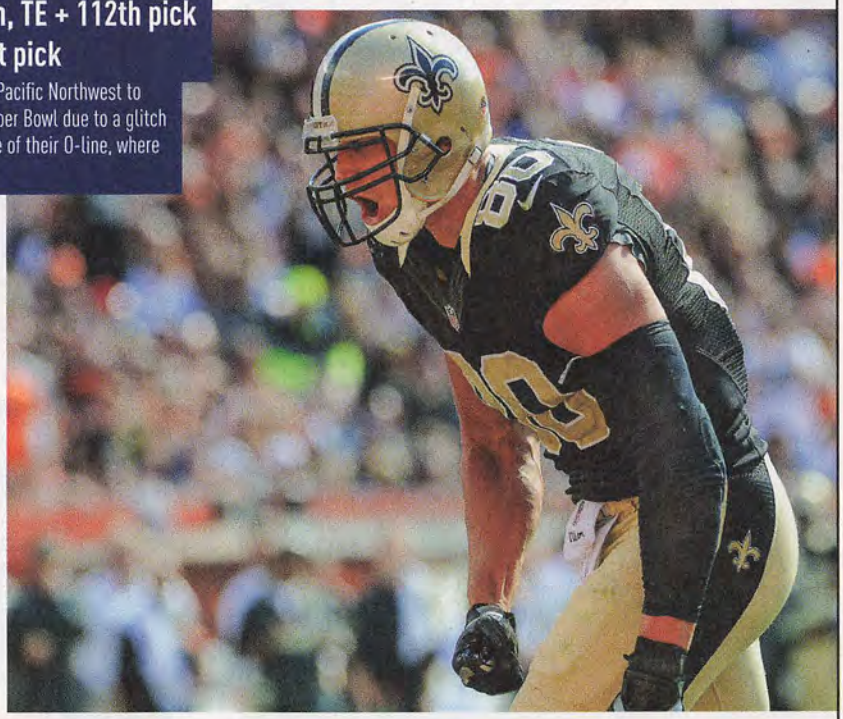
The game's best goal post-dunking tight end flies to the Pacific Northwest to play with a team that failed to win its second straight Super Bowl due to a glitch at the goal line. Meanwhile, the Saints protect the middle of their O-line, where Drew Brees is most vulnerable.



Eagles acquire: Sam Bradford, QB + 145th pick
Rams acquire: Nick Foles, QB + 119th pick + 2016 2nd rounder

One of Chip Kelly's many moves this offseason — which also included trading Pro Bowl runner LeSean McCoy to Buffalo in exchange for former Oregon Duck linebacker Kiko Alonso. Bradford and Foles could be stop-gap solutions or long-term answers in this game of QB musical chairs.

Bills acquire: Sammy Watkins, WR (2014 4th pick)
Browns acquire: 19th pick + 115th pick + Justin Gilbert, CB (2014 8th pick)

Hindsight is 20-20. Bills fans on both sides of the border are griping that Buffalo could have stayed at No. 9 and taken Odell Beckham Jr. (91 catches for 1,305 yards and 12 TDs in 12 games) instead of trading this year's first- and fourth-rounders to move up to take Watkins (65 catches for 982 yards and six TDs in 16 games).

Lions acquire: Haloti Ngata, DT + 231st pick
Ravens acquire: 122nd pick + 158th pick

Detroit lost its monster in the middle, Ndamukong Suh, to a six-year, $114 million deal in Miami. So the Lions traded a fourth- and fifth-rounder for another 300-pound Pro Bowler.

Vikings acquire: Mike Wallace, WR + 232nd pick Dolphins acquire: 149th pick

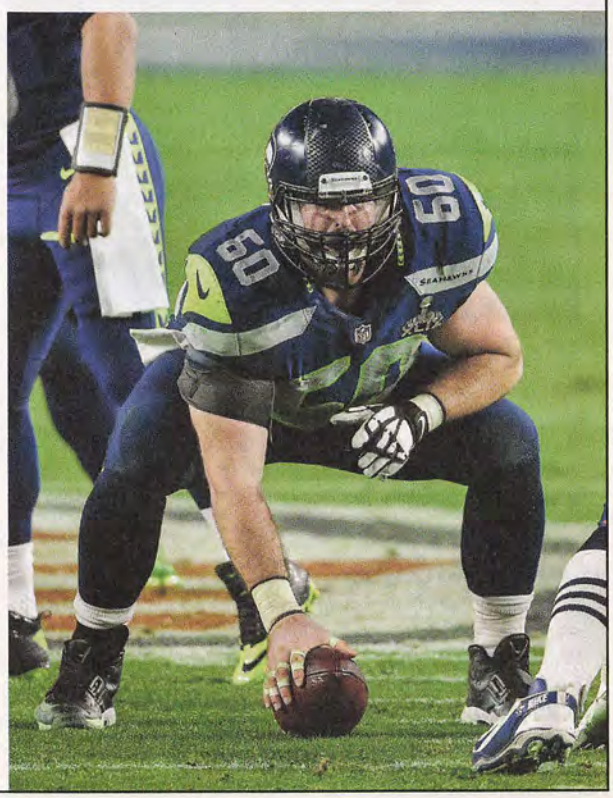
It doesn't take an investigative journalist to know a fifth-round pick is a cheap price for a speedy (albeit high-maintenance) wideout with 5,834 yards and 47 TDs in six seasons.

Rams acquire: Mark Barron, S, Rams
Buccaneers acquire: 109th pick + 183rd pick

The No. 7 overall pick in 2012, Barron has not lived up to his draft status. And his shortcomings may have hurt the stock of fellow Bama safety Landon Collins, who was the first pick of the second round (33rd).



Much Ado About Nothing

Click bait, anyone? There were more pre-draft stories written about trades that didn't happen than those that did transpire.

Philip Rivers, QB, Chargers

Swiss Family Rivers (wife Tiffany and seven kids) won't be playing near Philip's home town of Athens, Ala., or reuniting with former coordinator and Titans coach Ken Whisenhunt after all.

Adrian Peterson, RB, Vikings

A.D. spent all day being unhappy with his situation in Minnesota, where he and his agent reportedly feel betrayed by the front office. But he didn't get traded to Dallas or Arizona or anywhere else.

Look Good, Play Good; Play Good, Pay Good

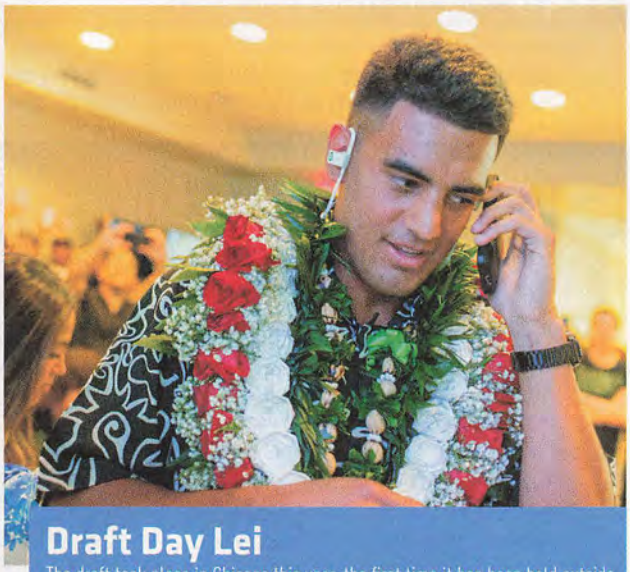
The first player to actually walk across the stage made up for the lost time of the top two picks. Jaguars' No. 3 pick Dante Fowler Jr. sported gold shoes, gold chains, a white suit with red satin lapels and a yellow-trimmed white bowtie.

King of All Media

This year's NFL Draft was the highest-rated cable show on Thursday, April 30, and the third-highest-rated draft since ESPN first broadcast the event in 1980. Day 1 of the three-day, seven-round hiring spree drew nearly nine million combined viewers of the simulcasts on ESPN and NFL Network — or twice as many viewers as Game 6 of the playoff matchup between the Los Angeles Clippers and San Antonio Spurs.

Social Anxiety

Jameis Winston became the first No. 1 pick to no-show at the NFL Draft since "Big Daddy" Dan Wilkinson failed to attend in 1994. But Winston did roll out the red carpet for family and friends, including longtime girlfriend Breion Allen — who was seen in the background of a since-deleted Instagram photo of Jameis with a plate of crab legs. Who knows whether or not they were purchased or from Publix?



Draft Day Lei

The draft took place in Chicago this year, the first time it has been held outside of New York City since 1964. But Marcus Mariota decided his native Honolulu, Hawaii, was more to his liking. Like Winston, Mariota watched on television as his name was called — or butchered, as was the case with the No. 2 pick — while covered in celebratory Hawaiian leis. Commissioner Roger Goodell announced "Marcus Mariotto" but Mariota didn't even notice. "Everyone was cheering so loud that I wasn't able to actually hear it," Mariota told 104.5 The Zone in Nashville. "He gave me a call probably half an hour later. He apologized, and I'm like, 'I have no idea what you're talking about.' But he was really apologetic, and I truly respect that for sure."

Samoan Sack

Hugging emotional draftees on stage has become Commissioner Goodell's "thing." That's what he does. Over the years, he's added some flair with personal handshakes and high-fives or extended tear-filled embraces with 20-somethings whose childhood dreams have just become a reality. But nothing compares to Goodell's run-in with 340-pound Danny Shelton, who lifted the Commish off the ground after being the No. 12 pick by the Browns.

Competitive Disadvantage

After the Rams made running back Todd Gurley the No. 10 pick, St. Louis runner Zac Stacy tweeted out his concerns with a succinct 'Yikes'. Two days later, Stacy was traded to the Jets for the No. 224 pick.

Fowler, Mariota, Goodell: AP; Gurley: Tami Chappell

The SEC may have had the most combined picks, but the conference can't boast either of the top two schools with the most players selected in this year's draft.

11 Florida State
10 Louisville
8 Florida
7 Alabama
7 Miami (Fla.)
6 Missouri
6 Oklahoma
6 Stanford
6 USC
5 Arkansas
5 Auburn
5 Clemson

Running Back Comeback

Reports of the demise of the first-round running back were greatly exaggerated. Prior to this year, no running back had been selected in the first round since Alabama's Trent Richardson (Browns, 3rd) in 2012. That streak is over. Georgia's Todd Gurley (Rams, 10th) and Wisconsin's Melvin Gordon (Chargers, 15th) were both taken in the top half of the first round and probably won't last much longer than that during fantasy football drafts this fall.

Undrafted Top-10 Talent

LSU O-lineman La'el Collins was expected to be drafted early in the first round — until his name surfaced in a Baton Rouge murder investigation. Collins went undrafted due to the cloud hanging over his head and league-wide paranoia over selecting someone whose name was associated with such a heinous crime.

What a difference a police interview, negative paternity test and passed polygraph test can make. Collins signed a fully guaranteed $1.65 million contract with the Dallas Cowboys as an undrafted free agent. As a result, he has the opportunity to become a free agent after three seasons — as opposed to the five years he likely would have had to wait had he gone in the first round.

Small Schools, Big Expectations

As always, football factories dominated the draft; 236 of 256 total picks were from FBS schools. But there were three players from non-FBS schools selected in the top 100 (roughly the first three rounds) who will be expected to adjust on the fly and go from playing in front of a few thousand fans to playing in the most-watched league in America:

Jaquiski Tartt, S, Samford (49ers, 46th)
Ali Marpet, G, Hobart (Buccaneers, 61st)
David Johnson, RB, Northern Iowa (Cardinals, 86th)

1. OHIO STATE BUCKEYES

College teams love to tout their success on draft day. The Buckeyes have reason to relish their — relatively speaking — quiet draft. Ohio State was the first national champion since 2002 not to produce a first-round pick immediately after winning a title. The Buckeyes' five total picks were fewer than 2014 also-rans Florida, Miami and Oklahoma. For Ohio State, that means that the core of a young, talented team is back for a run at another national title. Pass rusher Joey Bosa is in line to be a top draft pick in 2016 after earning unanimous All-America and Big Ten Defensive Player of the Year honors. Ezekiel Elliott is back after gaining more than 1,800 yards and will run behind a line that returns four starters. There are holes up the middle on defense, but Urban Meyer spent three years loading up for 2015. Nobody in the Big Ten has the type of athletes Ohio State does. The big question for Ohio State is internal, as in which star quarterback will start? Urban Meyer has won with all three — Cardale Jones, J.T. Barrett and Braxton Miller. None transferred or went pro, meaning all are in the running to take snaps in 2015 if all can stay healthy. If Meyer can prevent that competition from becoming a distraction, OSU might trample everyone in its way.

2. ALABAMA CRIMSON TIDE

While other schools would love a chance to flame out in the national semifinals, Alabama has spent the offseason looking for ways to improve. One way to get better is to pack 10 straight amazing recruiting classes together and head into 2015 with more talent than just about anybody else. The Tide does need a quarterback. Florida State transfer Jake Coker will make his second bid for the job. Derrick Henry should lead a potent ground attack, but the defense could use some more nasty (and speed) in the back seven.

3. BAYLOR BEARS

No Bryce Petty? No problem in Waco. With Seth Russell throwing to Corey Coleman and KD Cannon, the Baylor offense will once again be among the fastest around. The question is whether the defense will be championship quality. The personnel is there for a much better performance, most notably pass rusher extraordinaire Shawn Oakman and defensive tackle Andrew Billings. The big question is whether a Big 12 championship, without a league title game, will be enough in Year 2 of the College Football Playoff.

4. AUBURN TIGERS

What's this? Gus Malzahn has decided that defense matters? If you're going to pay Will Muschamp $1.6 million a year to run that side of the ball, it had better be a priority. If Muschamp can make Auburn a little tougher on that side of the ball — and seven returning starters will help that cause — the Tigers could be quite dangerous. Jeremy Johnson will trigger Malzahn's run-first spread attack, which will again pile up the points. But maybe, just maybe, Auburn will play a little old-fashioned SEC ball control.

Ohio State: Ric Fogel, Alabama, Georgia: Harrison McClary/Athlon Sports; Baylor: Bruce Schwartzman; Auburn: Tom DiPace/TCU: Chris Covatta; Oregon: Craig Mitchelldyer

5. TCU
HORNED FROGS

Horned Frogs fans still smarting from the 61–58 loss to Baylor last October had better hope that their heroes can find one more TD when TCU plays the Bears this season. That's critical, because for the first time in a while, defense is a question at TCU. Huge personnel losses on that side of the ball could make TCU games look even more like dragster races this season. With Heisman-contending quarterback Trevone Boykin back to trigger the offense, that's not such a bad thing.

6. USC
TROJANS

USC is back in the title chase. The Trojans have talent, but depth and experience are still questions, even though the school is finally off NCAA probation. Cody Kessler, a near-70 percent passer, is back after throwing for 3,826 yards and 39 TDs with just five picks.

7. MICHIGAN STATE
SPARTANS

Ohio State's championship and Jim Harbaugh's return to Michigan will steal headlines, but Sparty remains a force. Quarterback Connor Cook returns behind an experienced offensive line. End Shilique Calhoun anchors the defense, which must replace longtime coordinator Pat Narduzzi.

8. OREGON
DUCKS

Oregon may replace Heisman winner Marcus Mariota with Vernon Adams, a productive transfer from pass-happy Eastern Washington. The Ducks will be good again and probably pace the Pac-12, but without Mariota they might not be too imposing outside of the Pac-12 neighborhood.

9. FLORIDA STATE
SEMINOLES

Remember those great recruiting classes the Seminoles have been compiling the last few years? Get ready to see them in action this season. The big question is quarterback, where Sean Maguire takes over for Jameis Winston. Maguire managed to lead the Noles over Clemson, but he is by no means a proven commodity.

10. GEORGIA
BULLDOGS

Somebody has to carry the flag for the SEC East, and Georgia looks ready to do it. Sophomore running back Nick Chubb is a Heisman contender who should flourish under new coordinator Brian Schottenheimer. Is that enough to top the West? We'll find out when UGA plays Alabama and Auburn.

11. OLE MISS REBELS
The Rebels have the talent to build on last year's breakout season, but they'll have to do it behind new quarterback Chad Kelly, a junior college transfer who wore out his welcome at Clemson.

12. NOTRE DAME FIGHTING IRISH
Everett Golson and Malik Zaire will compete for the quarterback position, but the Irish defense needs a bounce-back season if Notre Dame is going to be a big-time postseason contender.

13. ARIZONA STATE SUN DEVILS
The Sun Devils are loaded with talent and are ready to play their full-throttle style on offense and defense. That means a ton of points, a non-stop stream of blitzes and at least one or two games this season that leave people wondering, "How did that happen?"

14. CLEMSON TIGERS
The stars for Clemson last season were coordinator Brent Venables and the defense, but the big storyline now is rising star quarterback Deshaun Watson playing without his superstar coordinator, Chad Morris.

15. LSU TIGERS
Sophomore running back Leonard Fournette is a budding star, but the Tigers' ever-lackluster quarterback position and reloading defense will determine whether LSU keeps slipping in the SEC West.

16. ARKANSAS RAZORBACKS
Instead of enduring another offseason of people wondering whether he belonged in the SEC, Bret Bielema has some serious momentum on his side. He'll try to keep it going with a charging-rhinoceros ground attack and stubborn defense.

17. OKLAHOMA SOONERS
The Sooners have a star running back in Samaje Perine and hired an Air Raid coordinator in Lincoln Riley from East Carolina. One of them will need to deliver, or Bob Stoops will start feeling the heat.

18. GEORGIA TECH YELLOW JACKETS
Don't worry about the Yellow Jackets' offense. But if Tech wants to continue the momentum from 2014's season-ending wins over Georgia and Mississippi State, it had better worry about the other side, too.

19. WISCONSIN BADGERS

20. TEXAS A&M AGGIES
Former Tennessee and LSU coordinator John Chavis will try to build a respectable defense to go with the Aggies' high-powered offense. Easier said than done.

21. MISSISSIPPI STATE BULLDOGS
Coach Dan Mullen and quarterback Dak Prescott return from one of the best teams ever to play in Starkville. The supporting cast, though, is thin.

22. TENNESSEE VOLUNTEERS
Optimism is as high as it's been in a while in Knoxville thanks to Butch Jones and a bowl blowout of Iowa. The Vols are likely a year away, but that year should be fun to watch.

23. UCLA BRUINS
Quarterback Brett Hundley is gone, but the Bruins have recruited at a high enough level to contend in the Pac-12. Now, can they avoid the head-scratching loss?

24. STANFORD CARDINAL
If Stanford can continue last year's progress on offense, the Cardinal will contend in the Pac-12 North. If not, Stanford is in eight-win territory again.

25. BOISE STATE BRONCOS
The Broncos will be solid on both lines as they look for a new quarterback and a replacement for running back Jay Ajayi. A major bowl slot is possible again.

Tom DiPace

WHO'S NUMBER 1?

Entering 2015, the race for the No. 1 overall pick appears to be as wide open as it has been in recent years, thanks in part to the suspension given to Pittsburgh's Le'Veon Bell, who led all non-quarterbacks in fantasy points. Is a loss of three games enough to knock Bell from consideration for the first pick? As you can see here, it certainly has made this conversation that much more interesting.

Le'Veon Bell for No. 1

A strong argument can be made for a couple of RBs at the No. 1 spot, but I have to go with Bell. Sure, the early suspension limits his value and will require a little patience from fantasy owners. However, the All-Pro finished second in the league with 1,361 rushing yards last season and ranked No. 2 among running backs by catching 83 passes. He also totaled 11 overall scores in 16 games.

While Bell is going to miss a couple of games, the third-year back is only getting better, and Pittsburgh's offensive line has improved significantly over the last few seasons. Additionally, the Steelers will have to lean on their offense even more in 2015, as the defense is still a unit in transition. Yes, the schedule is difficult, and Bell's suspension has to be taken into account. However, Bell might be the league's best all-around back, and the overall versatility is a huge bonus in PPR leagues. I'll take the risk on the suspension for an All-Pro RB entering the prime of his career with the opportunity to still play 13 games in 2015. — Steven Lassan, Athlon Sports

Jamaal Charles for No. 1

Looking at some of the top running backs from 2014, it's relatively easy to come to the conclusion that Charles should be the No. 1 overall pick again in 2015, much like I said last year. DeMarco Murray changed teams. Le'Veon Bell is automatically out a few games from suspension. Charles, meanwhile, runs behind an offensive line that is still jelling, and he was still able to rush for 5.0 yards per carry last season.

Charles also scored more total touchdowns (14) than any RB but Marshawn Lynch (17). Lynch is a year older than Charles, and he has 50 percent more career touches. Eddie Lacy might be the only option other than Charles. But I like Charles' gamebreaking ability better, and the Chiefs added some weapons in the passing game around him, which should keep defenses more honest.
— David Gonos, SoCalledFantasyExperts.com

Rob Gronkowski for No. 1

Gronkowski checks all the boxes for factors that could lead to his being selected No. 1 overall. If the tight end can only be used as such, he is head and shoulders above the rest of his position mates in the league, and you crush at the position. He was tops in targets (130) and yards (1,124) and tied for most touchdown receptions (12) among TEs last season. If a TE can be started as a flex, he's going to dominate that spot as well. He would have scored as either a top-10 RB or WR last season. PPR leagues only amplify his value. He was 21st in the entire league in catches, was tied for fourth in TD receptions, and was 15th in receiving yards. Simply put: Gronk. Scores. Points. — Corby Yarbrough, Athlon Sports

Eddie Lacy for No. 1

If not for the three games (I think it will end up being just two when all is said and done) that Le'Veon Bell will sit out at the beginning of the season, he would be my no-doubt No. 1. As it is, instead I'll go with Bell's 2013 draft classmate, Eddie Lacy. Last season, Lacy finished seventh in rushing with 1,139 yards. What's more important, however, is that he raised his yards per carry average from 4.1 as a rookie to 4.6 in 2014.

Lacy also improved upon his receiving numbers, reeling in 42 catches for 427 yards. His 13 total TDs were tied for fifth in the NFL, and only two backs (Marshawn Lynch, Jamaal Charles) had more. Since Bell won't be able to play a full season, I'll take my chances on another young, do-everything back entrenched in a lead role in an explosive offense. — Mark Ross, Athlon Sports

Marshawn Lynch for No. 1

This is the most wide-open race for No. 1 that I can remember. Every player in the conversation has massive upside, but all have question marks as well. Le'Veon Bell could miss as many as three games due to suspension. Jamaal Charles, Eddie Lacy, Arian Foster and DeMarco Murray have injury concerns. And there is too much depth and value to take a quarterback.

My debate falls to the most talented runner on the planet who also is extremely rested, Adrian Peterson, and the most durable player with the highest floor, Marshawn Lynch. I'll take Lynch over Peterson because he will be force-fed the ball as Seattle runs all of the tread off his tires over the next few seasons.

AVERAGE DEPTH OF THROW

By Mike Clay, Pro Football Focus Fantasy Managing Editor
@MikeClayNFL

At Pro Football Focus, our game analysts are constantly creating new statistical categories in hopes of maximizing the viewing public's understanding of the game. Back in 2007, we began tracking the depth of each pass. When examining quarterback tendencies, many will refer to yards per attempt, but it's important to realize that "YPA" can be severely distorted by completion percentage and YAC (yards after catch). This is where Average Depth of Throw (aDOT) comes into play. Proven to be significantly more predictable on a year-to-year basis, aDOT tracks only the distance downfield each pass travels before it is complete, incomplete or intercepted. Quarterbacks with high aDOT marks generally take more chances, which will lead to more of the coveted big plays, but also to a lower completion rate and additional interceptions. Quarterbacks with lower aDOT tendencies are more conservative, settling for short completions while avoiding costly turnovers.

Shown here are the aDOT marks for each quarterback who dropped back to pass at least 200 times during the 2014 season. To maximize our sample size, we include playoff data.

TOP 10 INJURY CONCERNS

1. Sam Bradford, PHI Where to begin with Bradford? The new Eagles starter missed the last nine games of 2013 with a torn ACL and all of 2014 after re-tearing the same ACL in the preseason. He defines brittle.

2. Robert Griffin III, WAS He's been hurt all three of his pro seasons. After missing seven games early in the season last fall, Griffin returned to start four of the Redskins' final seven games. However, until he learns to protect his body, he will always be a huge injury risk.

3. Tony Romo, DAL Until he retires, Romo's back will always be a concern for fantasy owners. He's missed just one game in each of the last two seasons and he has an elite offensive line, but he's also 35 years old and losing mobility by the day.

4. Carson Palmer, ARI Major knee issues have plagued Palmer on more than one occasion in his career. He will be 36 in late December and is coming off another torn ACL. How much longer can his knees hold up under a massive 6'5", 235-pound frame?

5. Peyton Manning, DEN There just aren't that many productive 39-year-old quarterbacks in the NFL record books. A torn quad sabotaged his performance late last year, and there will always be concerns about the neck injury that drove him from Indianapolis.

6. Philip Rivers, SD The ironman from NC State hasn't missed a start in nine seasons but suffered from rib and back problems late last season. He's 33 years old, and the Chargers were clearly shopping him this offseason.

7. Cam Newton, CAR Pop in a tape of the playoffs last year and it was clear to see Newton was hurting. He missed two games last fall, and his physical style of play could be reason for concern the rest of his career. After all, he's not exactly a pocket passer.

8. Jay Cutler, CHI The Bears' signal caller is persona non grata in Chicago. He turned 32 in the spring and hasn't played 16 games in a season since 2009. There are a lot of risks involved with drafting Cutler.

9. Alex Smith, KC In two-quarterback leagues, Smith is probably a weekly starter, and that means dealing with one of the more injury-prone QBs in the NFL. He's played in 16 games just twice in his nine-year career.

10. Ben Roethlisberger, PIT Few players take as many hits as Big Ben — which is bad news for a player who is slowly losing his mobility. He bounced back and started all 16 games the last two years, but he has taken 75 sacks over that span and is 33 years old. He's played in all 16 games just three times in his 11-year career.

TOP 10 INJURY CONCERNS

1. Adrian Peterson, MIN The Vikings' ball carrier should be well-rested after missing all but one game last year due to suspension. Did it extend his career? Possibly. But he's now in his 30s and has touched the ball 2,262 times in 104 career games.

2. DeMarco Murray, PHI Murray finally played 16 games in a season and delivered in a huge way last fall. Yet, the list of guys who succeed after touching the ball more than 390 times in a season is basically just Eric Dickerson. And Murray has been injury-prone for most of his college and pro career.

3. Arian Foster, HOU Foster missed three games last year and has missed 11 over the last two seasons. He's played in all 16 games just twice in his six years and hasn't been the same since his 391-touch season three years ago.

4. Todd Gurley, STL Gurley dealt with a number of injuries throughout his three-year Georgia career. The most severe was the torn ACL from which he is currently recovering. He was deserving of a top-10 selection in the NFL Draft, but his physical running style suggests a long-term injury concern.

5. Jamaal Charles, KC Charles' relatively diminutive frame (5'11", 199) and injury history will keep him on this list perennially. He has played in 15 games in each of the last two seasons but also posted his two lowest per-carry averages of his career in that span (5.0 both seasons).

6. Darren McFadden, DAL Since Dallas refused to address the running back position in the draft, and it appears that the Cowboys will enter the season with Run-DMC as their starter, he must be on this list. McFadden played in all 16 games last year for the first time in his seven-year career.

7. Eddie Lacy, GB He dealt with some injuries in college at Alabama and has had some issues for the Packers. And concussion issues are even more unpredictable. He also has touched the ball more than 600 times in his first two seasons.

8. Jonathan Stewart, CAR Stewart is poised to be the starter in Carolina, but don't jump too early to snatch the eighth-year veteran. He's missed 20 games in the last three seasons and has just 28 starts in his 90-game career.

9. Andre Ellington, ARI The former Clemson Tiger was a big injury concern in college, and that has continued in the NFL. Ellington missed four games last year and didn't deliver on his big preseason hype.

10. Mark Ingram, NO After the big offseason contract following his best year as a pro, Ingram will enter camp as a hot fantasy commodity. Yet, the Heisman Trophy winner has played in just 50 of 64 games in four seasons in the NFL.

TOP 10 INJURY CONCERNS

1. Victor Cruz, NYG Cruz was off to his worst season before a knee injury ended his year in Week 6. He's been rehabbing and should be healthy; however, he also missed two games the year prior. The smallish receiver is an injury risk every year now.

2. Keenan Allen, SD Allen is a supreme talent who is still very young but has dealt with injuries dating back to his final year at Cal. He missed three games in 2012, one game as a rookie and the last two games a year ago with serious collarbone and ankle injuries.

3. Brandon Marshall, NYJ He's been durable most of his career but is returning from a collapsed lung and broken ribs that ended his season three games early last fall. He takes a lot of hits and is 31 years old. He's a big target for defensive backs and doesn't have an accurate quarterback now.

4. DeSean Jackson, WAS Anyone who weighs less than 180 pounds in the NFL is a guaranteed injury risk. Jackson has played in 16 games just once in six years since his rookie season. It's tough to see him playing a full season ever again.

5. Julian Edleman, NE Tom Brady's top target is a walking injury report. He's made 24 starts in 30 games over the last two years, missing only two games last fall. However, he's missed an average of three games per season over his six-year career.

6. Jeremy Maclin, KC Two major knee injuries have cost Maclin full seasons, both at Mizzou and in Philadelphia (2013). He's played only two 16-game seasons in his six-year career. His smaller stature has much to do with his injury history.

7. Percy Harvin, BUF Playing in 13 games last year should be considered a huge success for a guy with Harvin's injury history. He missed seven games in 2012, 15 in 2013 and three last year. Concussions, migraines, lack of size and his style of play make it hard to trust him on draft day.

8. Calvin Johnson, DET After playing in at least 15 games in five of his first six seasons, the 29-year-old has missed five games in the last two years. He's a big target who takes a lot of hits — even if it probably won't impact his average draft position too much.

9. A.J. Green, CIN He's been healthy most of his career — missing only one game as a rookie before last fall. But he wasn't the same player last year after missing three games due to a toe injury in the middle of the season. He's not an overly big player for his height, so keep an eye on his health.

10. Julio Jones, ATL He's a rare talent but has played in 16 games in a season only once in four pro seasons. He carries a bunch of weight and takes a ton of hits a la Johnson, Marshall or Green. It may not impact his draft stock, though.

AVERAGE DEPTH OF TARGET

Tracked by our game analysts at Pro Football Focus, Average Depth of Target (aDOT) is a better method of tracking the way NFL pass catchers are utilized. Basically an improved version of the popular and mainstream yards per reception (YPR) statistic, aDOT removes volatile YAC (yards after catch) from the equation, instead focusing only on the average distance the player is downfield on each target. Because we're analyzing targets and not receptions, our sample nearly doubles in size, which is key in developing predictable statistics. This season, when your leaguemates are gushing over Joe Schmo's 23.5 YPR thanks to one, fluky bubble screen gone right, you'll see his 5.0 aDOT and know he's not the deep threat he appears to be.

Shown here are the Top 20 and Bottom 20 aDOT marks from the 2014 season. Only wide receivers with 50-plus targets are shown, and playoff data is included.

TOP 10 INJURY CONCERNS

1. Rob Gronkowski, NE The massive target will never not be considered an injury risk despite playing 15 games last year. His style of play will always create risk for fantasy players, and it's why he's missed 15 games over the last three years.

2. Julius Thomas, JAC In two years as a star in Denver, Thomas missed five games. Now in Jacksonville, he's had surgery to repair the injured ankle that cost him three games last season.

3. Antonio Gates, SD Age is the biggest concern with Gates. He's played in 16 games in each of the last two seasons after missing 10 games from 2010-12. At age 35 this season, the injury risk has increased significantly for a player who plays a physical position.

4. Dwayne Allen, IND There are few players who play with less regard for their personal safety. But such a style means Allen is constantly dealing with injuries. He missed all but one game two years ago and three games last fall.

5. Jordan Cameron, MIA He was a great pick up for the Dolphins but has some serious concussion concerns after missing six games last year in Cleveland. In fact, Cameron has never played in all 16 games in a season.

6. Austin Seferian-Jenkins, TB As a rookie, ASJ played only nine games and dealt with ankle and back injuries during his first season. He's a massive target who will be excellent if on the field full time.

7. Owen Daniels, DEN The poster child for injuries, Daniels will befuddle fantasy drafters with locational upside (Denver) but major injury risk. He's had three seasons in the last six in which he played 11 games or fewer. Draft with caution (and a back-up plan).

8. Jordan Reed, WAS He played in nine games as a rookie and just 11 games last year. When healthy, he's a starter in most fantasy formats. But he's dealt with concussions and various other ailments and isn't a lock for a full season.

9. Tyler Eifert, CIN The Bengals' tight end played in 15 games as a rookie but started just one last year after a shoulder injury and subsequent surgery ended his season prematurely. He should have a bigger role this fall but needs to stay healthy to capitalize.

10. Kyle Rudolph, MIN Much like Daniels, Rudolph may be on this list annually. He missed eight games two years ago and seven games last season and has been an injury risk throughout both his college and pro careers.

AVERAGE DEPTH OF TARGET

Tracked by our game analysts at Pro Football Focus, Average Depth of Target (aDOT) is a better method of tracking the way NFL pass catchers are utilized. Basically an improved version of the popular and mainstream yards per reception (YPR) statistic, aDOT removes volatile YAC (yards after catch) from the equation, instead focusing only on the average distance the player is down field on each target. Because we're analyzing targets and not receptions, our sample nearly doubles in size, which is key in developing predictable statistics. This season, when looking for a bye week fill-in, bold owners can take a chance on a tight end with a high aDOT in hopes of a big play or two. Risk-averse owners in PPR formats can nab a big man with a low aDOT, and thus higher catch potential.

Shown here are the aDOT marks for each tight end targeted at least 40 times during the 2014 season. To maximize our sample size, playoff data is included.

GOING UP, GOING DOWN

Chicago The Bears have been a disaster on defense recently, finishing no better than 30th in yards or points allowed in either of the past two seasons. But that was with offensive-minded Marc Trestman as head coach. Now John Fox is calling the shots, and he has former 49ers defensive coordinator Vic Fangio to help him turn things around. Personnel questions still exist, but hopefully additions such as Antrel Rolle, Pernell McPhee, Ray McDonald, Mason Foster and second-round pick Eddie Goldman can help solidify and strengthen this unit. Don't be surprised if Chicago emerges as a reliable fantasy option in 2015.

Cincinnati The Bengals went from being a top-five fantasy DST in 2013 to 24th last season. Cincinnati's pass rush, which was productive two seasons ago with 43 sacks (10th in NFL), was practically non-existent in 2014, finishing dead last with just 20 QB takedowns. Otherwise, several of the defense's counting stats were relatively the same when comparing 2013 to '14, including points allowed (19.1 vs. 21.5), and interceptions (20 both seasons). With defensive end Michael Johnson back in the fold to bolster the pass rush and two rookies, linebacker Paul Dawson and safety Josh Shaw, adding to the depth, this Bengals defense may show its claws once again in 2015.

Miami The Dolphins reeled in the biggest fish in the free-agent market this offseason, signing Ndamukong Suh to a record-setting six-year, $114 million deal. The All-Pro defensive tackle should help Miami field one of the league's most formidable front lines, teaming Suh with defensive ends Cameron Wake and Olivier Vernon. Suh certainly did not come cheap ($60 million guaranteed in first three years), but he should help improve the Dolphins' run defense after finishing 24th (121.1 ypg) a season ago. This unit still has some depth issues elsewhere, but Suh's presence alone is enough to like Miami's chances of emerging as a top-10 fantasy DST this season.

N.Y. Jets Rex Ryan is gone, but the Jets kept their defensive mindset by hiring Cardinals coordinator Todd Bowles as their new head coach. And Bowles got one nice housewarming gift when the team brought Darrelle Revis back to the Big Apple. The shutdown cornerback will be reunited with running mate Antonio Cromartie, his teammate from 2010-12 when New York was consistently one of the NFL's stingier defenses. And an already stout defensive line headlined by Sheldon Richardson and Muhammad Wilkerson got even deeper with the addition of first-round pick Leonard Williams. Put the pieces all together and it's pretty safe to assume that this DST won't finish 2015 29th in fantasy points.

Detroit Losing Ndamukong Suh to Miami in free agency is tough enough, but the Lions also saw Nick Fairley sign with the Rams and traded George Johnson to the Bucs. Those three defensive linemen combined for 16.5 of the team's 42 sacks in 2014 and are now gone from the NFL's No. 1 rushing defense (69.3 ypg). Detroit did acquire former Raven Haloti Ngata in a trade, but the two-time All-Pro is 31 years old. The Lions should get key linebacker Stephen Tulloch back from a torn ACL, but the question marks in the secondary remain and could be even more of an issue this season since Suh, Fairley and Johnson won't be around to put pressure on the quarterback.

New England Not only is defensive line linchpin Vince Wilfork now in Houston, but the Patriots also will be breaking in new cornerbacks, with Darrelle Revis (Jets) and Brandon Browner (Saints) elsewhere. Devin McCourty was re-signed to anchor the back end, and Chandler Jones replaces Wilfork as the headliner up front, but even the healthy return of linebacker Jerod Mayo may not be enough for the Patriots to overcome depth issues. New England went heavy on defense in the draft, using seven of its 11 picks on that side. However, this inexperience and lack of continuity could lead to inconsistent performances, making it hard to endorse the Patriots DST as an every-week starting option in 2015.

Philadelphia The Eagles were the third-highest-scoring fantasy DST last season, but a closer look at the numbers paints a different picture. Philadelphia finished 28th in total defense (375.6 ypg) and tied for 22nd in scoring defense (25.0 ppg), yet still produced fantasy-wise thanks to turnovers (28) and touchdowns. The Eagles scored 11 defensive or special teams touchdowns in 2014, five more such scores than any other team. Yes, Philadelphia signed cornerback Byron Maxwell in free agency and acquired linebacker Kiko Alonso in a trade. However, given the volatility when it comes to creating turnovers, the Eagles DST will be hard-pressed to replicate its 2014 fantasy success this season.

San Francisco The No. 4 scoring fantasy DST in 2013, the 49ers dropped to 11th last season and will probably continue their decline in 2015. Not only has the coaching staff been completely turned over, but San Francisco also has seen linebackers Patrick Willis and Chris Borland retire this offseason, while starting cornerbacks Perrish Cox and Chris Culliver left via free agency. All-Pro linebacker NaVorro Bowman should finally make his return from a torn ACL, but this defense will have a new look in 2015. The reality is that this once-formidable defense has clearly fallen to fourth in the rugged NFC West and could be in for a long, difficult season.

TOP SUPER BOWL PERFORMANCES

By Michael Bradley

Since the Super Bowl is football's biggest stage, it should be no surprise that its most impressive performances have come from some of the sport's most memorable players. Regular-season success brings notice, but big results in the Big Game create legends.

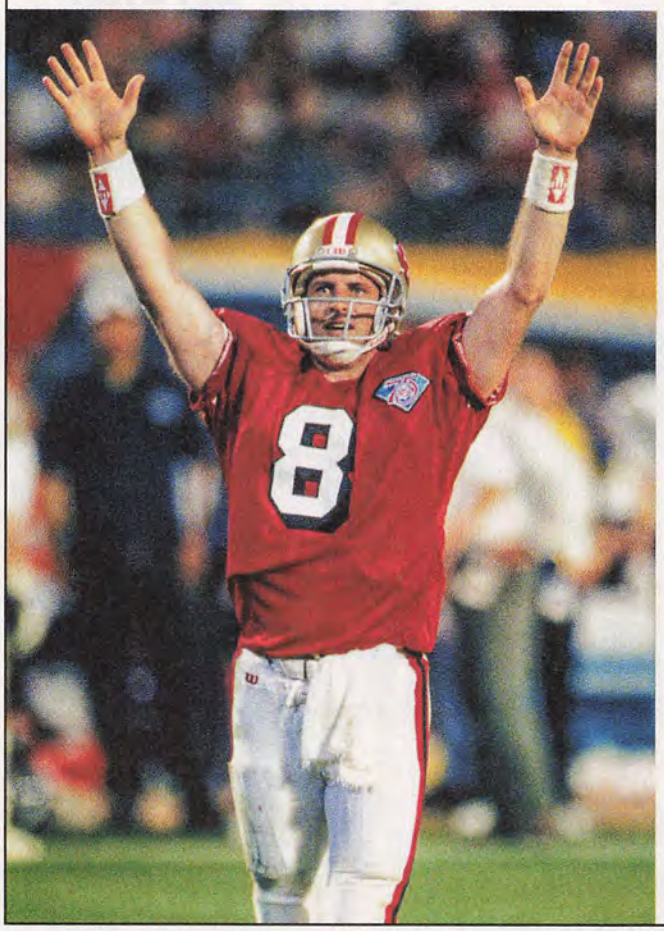
It's one thing to throw five TD passes in November, but those who can do it in the biggest game in sports earn spots in football's Valhalla among the most clutch performers. There have been legendary teams to win Super Bowls and dynasties galore, but the players have been the ones to author the true memorable Super moments.

Here are the top 10 Super performances.

1. Steve Young • San Francisco • Super Bowl XXIX

It had to be extremely difficult for Young, who began his career in the USFL, suffered through a couple of forgettable seasons with Tampa Bay and then sat behind Joe Montana for four years. By the time Young became a starter, he was 30 years old, and some wondered whether he could lead the 49ers the way his famous predecessor had.

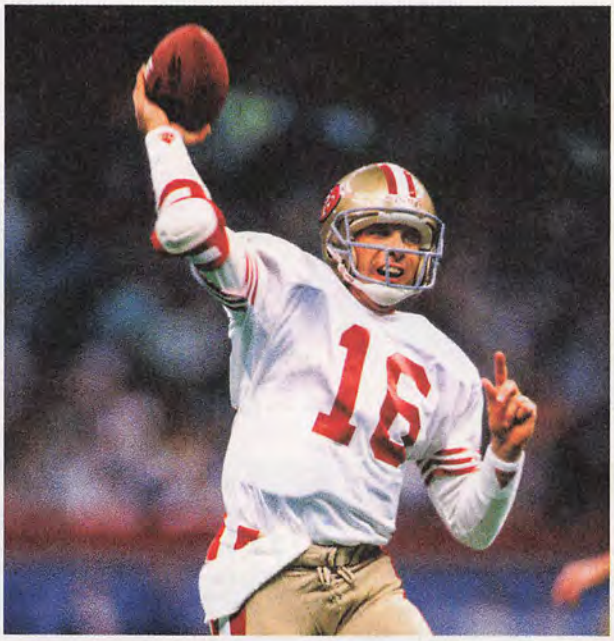
Young proved himself more than worthy of the role right away, and by the time he led San Francisco to the Super Bowl to culminate the 1994 season, Young was primed for a remarkable outing. It was his only start in the Big Game, and he was supreme. He completed 24-of-36 passes for 325 yards and six touchdowns in the Niners' 49–26 rout of San Diego. Young also ran five times for 49 yards to solidify his Hall of Fame status.



2. Joe Montana • San Francisco • Super Bowl XXIV

It's amazing that Montana came into the NFL as a relatively unheralded third-round pick after proving himself to be Mr. Comeback while at Notre Dame. But Montana quickly proved to be one of the NFL's top big-time performers and won four Super Bowls in the 1980s.

It's difficult to choose his best Super effort. Some say it was the 331-yard, three-TD outing against Miami in Super Bowl XIX. Others point to the 357-yard, two-score outburst against Cincinnati in XXIII. All told, Montana completed 68 percent of his passes for 1,142 yards, 11 touchdowns and no interceptions in his four Super Bowls, which comes out roughly to a QB rating of two million. The best of the bunch, however, is his clinical dissection of Denver in SF's 55–10 Super Bowl XXIV romp. Montana completed 22-of-29 passes for 297 yards and five scores to conclude his Super résumé in style. It appeared as if Montana was playing against only nine players, as he carved up the helpless Broncos and cemented his football immortality.



3. Kurt Warner • St. Louis • Super Bowl XXXIV

It's a story that has been told many times, but it never gets old. Before Warner joined the Rams and became a champion, he was a grocery store checker who couldn't get a look from an NFL team. For him to go from that kind of anonymity to Super Bowl legend is one of football's most amazing stories. Warner not only got a big break when St. Louis decided to take a closer look at him, but he also benefited from the "Greatest Show on Turf" offense created by Rams coordinator Mike Martz. Playing from the shotgun and benefiting from the NFL's most gifted set of receivers, Warner became the league's most prolific gunslinger.

At no time was that more evident than during Warner's Super debut. He completed 24-of-45 passes for a record 414 yards, two scores and no picks in the Rams' dramatic, 23–16 win over Tennessee. It was the first of three great performances for Warner, who threw for 1,156 yards in Super Bowl competition and sent NFL teams into supermarkets and hardware stores in search of the next overlooked superstar.

4. Jerry Rice • San Francisco • Super Bowl XXIII

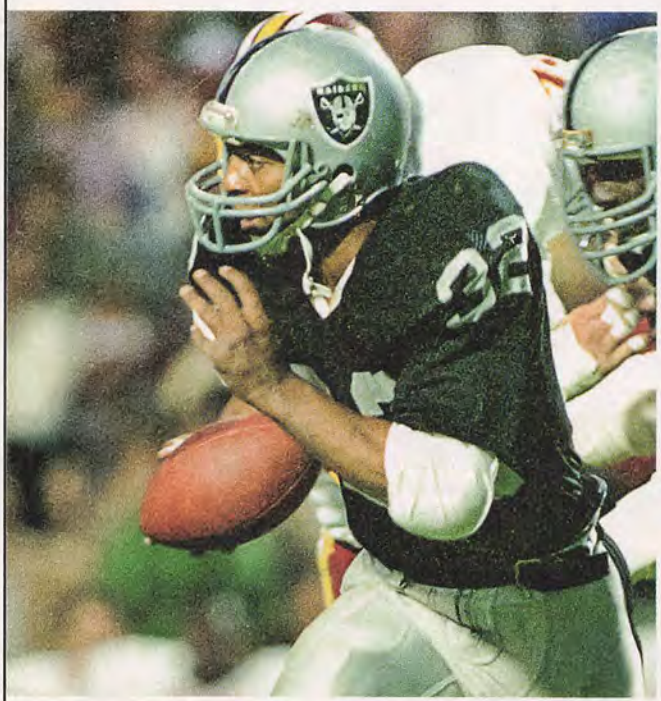
There were more than a couple NFL fans who had never heard of Rice when he moved from Archie Cooley's Mississippi Valley State offensive circus to the 49ers. The receiver had benefited from a system that completely overwhelmed rivals and a quarterback — Willie "The Satellite" Totten — with a grenade launcher for an arm. But Rice was much more than a product of a wild system. He was a precise route runner with the ability to turn a 5-yard completion into a big play.

And when the Niners started on their Super Bowl binge, he was a huge part of the success. Even though the magnificent receiver didn't catch the game-winning TD pass in the 20–16 victory over Cincinnati, he did just about everything else. Rice snared 11 passes for 215 yards (both records at the time) and a touchdown. It was the opening salvo in a four-game fusillade that included 33 catches, eight scores and a 17.8-yard average.

5. Marcus Allen • Los Angeles • Super Bowl XVIII

As the Super Bowl gained traction throughout the 1970s and early '80s, great running backs led the way. The pro game was still a ground-based concern during that time, thanks to greats such as Larry Csonka, Franco Harris and John Riggins. But none of them had a combination of skills like Allen, who had great size, enough power to knock some people down, breakaway speed and the rare leaping ability to get over piles on the goal line. Even as the game opened up, and the pass became a bigger weapon, Allen was still a major factor.

He proved that against Washington. His 74-yard touchdown bolt that included a high-speed cutback and a sprint to the end zone was the signature play of a 20-carry, 191-yard, two-TD performance in the Raiders' 38–9 rout.



6. Doug Williams • Washington • Super Bowl XXII

During his time with Tampa Bay, Williams proved himself to be a consummate leader. His charismatic approach helped the lowly Bucs gain respectability in the NFL. But he couldn't ever match his winning personality with some big numbers. While most people concentrated on the color of Williams' skin, he craved the chance to come up big in a big game.

That happened against Denver. Things didn't look all that good for Washington when the Broncos took a 10–0 first-quarter lead, and Williams was briefly consigned to the sidelines with a leg injury. But Williams owned the second quarter, throwing four TD passes in an explosive performance that ultimately yielded 340 passing yards and a 42–10 D.C. triumph.

7. Tom Brady • New England • Super Bowl XXXVIII

There can be no better example of the capriciousness of the NFL Draft than Brady, a sixth-round pick who became one of the greatest quarterbacks of all time and one of only three to earn four Super Bowl victories. Few expected much from him, but Brady became a tremendous leader and big-game performer.

He was the boy wonder in the Pats' first Super triumph over St. Louis, but when Brady took on Carolina two years later, he was in complete control, throwing for 354 yards and three scores on 66.7 percent passing and completing four passes on the final drive to set up the game-winning field goal.

8. Terrell Davis • Denver • Super Bowl XXXII

Davis was another big draft mistake — at least for those teams that passed on him as many as six times. Denver was smart enough to grab him, and he became a huge weapon. Davis had a great blend of speed and power, and his production provided the last ingredient for Denver's Super Bowl recipe.

John Elway had tried to win Super Bowls three times before, but it wasn't until Davis arrived on the scene that the quarterback succeeded. In this win over Green Bay, Davis was the meal ticket, rushing 30 times for 157 yards and three scores, including the decisive TD with 1:45 left in a 31–24 triumph.

9. Terry Bradshaw • Pittsburgh • Super Bowl XIII

People loved to make fun of the folksy Bradshaw. They ripped him for his wobbly passes. And they even questioned his intelligence, even though he was calling his own plays while most of the league was getting its assignments from the coaching staff. Bradshaw was one of the toughest quarterbacks of all time, and his leadership and ability to deliver in the postseason helped lift Pittsburgh to the top of the heap. One of only two passers to post 4–0 records in Super play, Bradshaw was at his finest against the Cowboys in a thrilling 35–31 victory. He completed 17-of-30 passes for 318 yards and four scores, including a 75-yarder to John Stallworth.

10. Larry Csonka • Miami • Super Bowl VIII

He was the consummate battering ram and the prototype of the 1970s back. Csonka played with talented backs such as Mercury Morris and Jim Kiick. But when the Dolphins needed to preserve a lead, get a tough yard or just soften up opposing defenses for one of Bob Griese's rare throws downfield, the job went to the Syracuse product, who was practically impossible to bring down with just one man. There was nothing subtle about the Dolphins' 24–7 win over Minnesota. Griese threw only seven passes, and "The Zonk" did the rest, rushing 33 times for 145 yards, two scores and countless bloody noses.

2015 AFC PREDICTIONS

AFC EAST

1. New England Patriots
Brady suspension aside, they're still the class of this division.

2. Buffalo Bills
New coach. New attitude. Same old QB questions.

3. Miami Dolphins
Can Tannehill lead them out of the 8–8 rut?

4. New York Jets
Defense will be better — still not enough offense, though.

AFC NORTH

1. Pittsburgh Steelers
Pieces in place but schedule is no picnic.

2. Cincinnati Bengals
Consistent contenders, but will they ever win a playoff game?

3. Baltimore Ravens
Division is so close that their third-place schedule could lift them to top.

4. Cleveland Browns
No title expectations, but all eyes will still be on Johnny Manziel.

AFC SOUTH

1. Indianapolis Colts
Took a step last year. Can they take the final one to the Super Bowl?

2. Houston Texans
Offense needs to be better; J.J. Watt can't possibly score more TDs.

3. Jacksonville Jaguars
Brought in a lot of new faces. Offense can't get much worse.

4. Tennessee Titans
Top pick Marcus Mariota isn't expected to work a miracle.

AFC WEST

1. Denver Broncos
New staff could rejuvenate Manning & Co. for one more run.

2. Kansas City Chiefs
The injury bug can't possibly bite as hard as it did last season.

3. San Diego Chargers
Will this be Philip Rivers' last go-round with the Bolts?

4. Oakland Raiders
Don't look now, but the Raiders seem to have a real plan.

AFC COORDINATOR CAROUSEL

BALTIMORE RAVENS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Gary Kubiak New: Marc Trestman
Fired after going 13–19 in two seasons as Chicago's head coach, Trestman returns to his roots in Baltimore. This will be Trestman's fifth stint as an NFL offensive coordinator, the most recent being with the Raiders from 2001-03.

BUFFALO BILLS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Jim Schwartz New: Dennis Thurman
Thurman's tenure with the Jets pre-dated Rex Ryan, but he is one of several assistants who have followed Ryan to Buffalo. Hired as the Jets' defensive backs coach in 2008, Thurman was elevated to defensive coordinator in '13.

BUFFALO BILLS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Nathaniel Hackett New: Greg Roman
Roman joins Rex Ryan and the Bills after spending the past four seasons with Jim Harbaugh and the 49ers. Roman and Ryan have worked on the same staff before, in Baltimore from 2006-07 when the former was an offensive assistant and the latter was the Ravens' defensive coordinator.

CLEVELAND BROWNS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Kyle Shanahan New: John DeFilippo
An Ohio native, DeFilippo is the Browns' sixth offensive coordinator in as many years. The quarterbacks coach for the Raiders the past three seasons, DeFilippo is getting his first crack at being a coordinator on the NFL level.

DENVER BRONCOS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Jack Del Rio New: Wade Phillips
Phillips has 37 years of coaching experience in the NFL, 33 of those coming as a defensive coordinator or head coach. He previously served as the Broncos' defensive coordinator from 1989-92 and the head coach from 1993-94. He also was Gary Kubiak's defensive coordinator in Houston from 2011-13.

DENVER BRONCOS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Adam Gase New: Rick Dennison
Dennison's ties to the Broncos span 26 years, beginning with his playing days as a linebacker (1982-90). After starting his coaching career with Denver, Dennison joined Gary Kubiak's staff in Houston, serving as offensive coordinator for the Texans from 2010-13.

JACKSONVILLE JAGUARS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Jedd Fisch New: Greg Olson
The Raiders' offensive coordinator the past two seasons, Olson has served in this position for four other teams during his coaching career. Olson also has previously coached for the Jaguars, serving as Mike Mularkey's assistant head coach/quarterbacks coach in 2012.

NEW YORK JETS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Dennis Thurman New: Kacy Rodgers
The Dolphins' defensive line coach the past seven seasons, Rodgers is getting his first shot at being a coordinator for rookie head coach Todd Bowles. Prior to going to Miami, Rodgers coached in Dallas from 2003-07.

NEW YORK JETS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Marty Mornhinweg New: Chan Gailey
Gailey has been a head coach on both the college and NFL levels as well as in Europe for the short-lived World League. Besides leading the Cowboys (1998-99, 18–14) and Bills (2010-12, 16–32), Gailey also has been an offensive coordinator for the Broncos, Steelers, Dolphins and Chiefs.

OAKLAND RAIDERS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Jason Tarver New: Ken Norton Jr.
Norton won three Super Bowl rings during his 13-year career as a linebacker for the Cowboys and 49ers. This is Norton's first coordinator job after spending the past five seasons as the Seahawks' linebackers coach.

OAKLAND RAIDERS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Greg Olson New: Bill Musgrave
Philadelphia's quarterbacks coach last season, Musgrave is not only reuniting with his former boss, Jack Del Rio, but he's also returning to the place where his coaching career began back in 1997. Musgrave was Del Rio's offensive coordinator with the Jaguars from 2003-04, and he also spent three seasons (2011-13) with the Vikings in the same capacity.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Dick LeBeau New: Keith Butler
The Steelers' linebackers coach since 2003, Butler has some big shoes to fill following the resignation of LeBeau, the Hall of Famer whose NFL career spans nearly 60 years.

TENNESSEE TITANS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Ray Horton New: Dick LeBeau/Ray Horton
After 11 years running the Steelers' defense, LeBeau joined the Titans in February as assistant head coach/defense. The Hall of Fame coach is in charge of the defense and will work with Horton, who retains the title of defensive coordinator, to implement the system.

2 AFC EAST FORECAST

When coach Doug Marrone up and quit on the team on New Year's Eve, the Buffalo Bills were doing what they always do: leading the NFL in dysfunction. Marrone was on the job just two years and had led the team to a 9–7 finish, Buffalo's best in a decade but still not good enough to end a 15-year playoff drought.

But just when it seemed to be business as usual, new owner Terry Pegula and second-year general manager Doug Whaley began making blockbuster moves all over the place. It began with the hiring of Rex Ryan, jettisoned by the rival New York Jets, to replace Marrone. It reached a fever pitch when a trade was swung with the Philadelphia Eagles to acquire running back LeSean McCoy.

"Is this thing on? Because it's going to be on," blurted the colorful Ryan into the microphone.

Whether Buffalo has improved on offense enough to complement one of the league's top defenses remains to be seen. But Team Dysfunction has finally gotten its act together.

SAMMY WATKINS, WR

OFFENSE The Bills have lacked true star power on this side of the ball, but things are turning. The McCoy acquisition vastly upgraded the club's moribund rushing game that fell to 25th in the NFL at 92.6 yards per game as veteran Fred Jackson and the departed C.J. Spiller (New Orleans) battled injuries. As a team, the Bills set a franchise record for fewest rushing yards in a 16-game season with 1,482.

McCoy, just 27, had 1,319 yards on 312 attempts all by himself for the Eagles. With 9,074 combined career yards and 54 touchdowns, he is an elite talent with workhorse stamina for whom teams will have to game-plan.

Without the McCoy deal, along with the signing of Pro Bowl fullback Jerome Felton, Ryan's proclamation of "ground and pound" would amount to ground chuck. Now the Bills — under new coordinator Greg Roman, who rode Frank Gore with the San Francisco 49ers — can complement the quarterback with a running game that can dictate tempo.

Oh yes, quarterback. The Bills will hold a wide-open competition for the job among 2013 first-round pick EJ Manuel, savvy veteran Matt Cassel, picked up in a trade with Minnesota, and free agent Tyrod Taylor.

For Manuel, who was benched after a month in favor of the departed Kyle Orton, this is a crossroads. Unless he's the clear-cut best player through the preseason, Ryan and Roman will be more than content to have Cassell game-manage their run-based attack. Cassell, 31, led 10-win teams in New England and Kansas City in the past, and his 96-to-70 TD-to-interception ratio for his career has to be respected.

But don't get the impression Buffalo will be all run and no fun. The Bills receiving corps is young and dynamic, led by last year's rookie sensation Sammy Watkins, who set team rookie marks for catches (65) and yards (982), and second-year man Robert Woods. The well-traveled Percy Harvin was also added to the mix, and Chris Hogan is an emerging talent. The tight end position received a huge boost as well with the signing of Miami free agent Charles Clay, who will give the Bills many matchup advantages downfield.

The line will remain a bit unsettled through the summer but figures to shake itself out just fine. Free agent guard Richie Incognito, who spent a year in exile after "Bullygate" in Miami, brings attitude and toughness to a unit that produced just seven rushing TDs and yielded 39 sacks. The other guard spot is up for grabs, but there is no shortage of candidates, including rookie John Miller. Underrated center Eric Wood will man the middle for a seventh season.

DEFENSE In 2014, the Bills ranked fourth in yards allowed (312.2), behind only Seattle, Detroit and Denver. They also ranked fourth in points allowed (18.1), first in sacks (54), third in takeaways (30), third in pass defense and first in third-down efficiency.

That makes for a pretty tough encore for new coordinator Dennis Thurman, who came over with Ryan from the Jets. But it is one Buffalo — given its wealth of talent — is capable of.

It all starts up front where the Bills feature not one, not two, but three Pro Bowl linemen: Mario Williams, Marcell Dareus and Kyle Williams. With Jerry Hughes, who was re-signed as a free agent, Buffalo is able to generate immense pressure on opposing quarterbacks without having to blitz much; those four combined for 39.5 of the team's NFL-leading 54 sacks in 2014. Things are so good at this position, the backups could start for other teams.

Ryan is known as a 3-4 proponent, but in truth, he matches his scheme to his personnel, so the Bills will feature a lot of four-man looks (disguised as three-man). Mario Williams and Hughes can play off the line as outside linebackers as well.

Watkins: Peter Brouillet; Fan: AP; Williams: Tom DiPace

NEW ERA

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

FAMILY BUSINESS Rex Ryan isn't the first member of his notable coaching family to work in Buffalo. His even more famous father, Buddy Ryan, was the defensive line coach at the University of Buffalo from 1961-65. Buddy Ryan coached the Chicago Bears' famed 1985 Super Bowl defense and later was head coach of the Eagles and Cardinals. Rex's brother Rob has been a defensive coordinator for four NFL teams.

BILLICK COACHING TREE Ryan is off the Brian Billick coaching tree, having served under the Baltimore Ravens coach who won Super Bowl XXXV. Other head coaches who are part of that tree are Marvin Lewis, Jack Del Rio, Mike Smith and Mike Nolan. "I'm proud to be associated with Brian Billick," Ryan says. "He put together an incredible staff there ... and he fell under the Bill Walsh tree." Ryan has brought two of Billick's assistants with him to Buffalo, Greg Roman as his offensive coordinator and Dennis Thurman as his defensive coordinator.

GROUND AND POUND When Ryan says he believes in running the ball, he means it. While coach of the Jets for six seasons, only once did his offense pass the ball more times than it ran it. During the 2009 and 2010 seasons, when the Jets advanced to the AFC title game both years, they ran the ball 607 and 534 times, respectively. Unfortunately for Ryan, the Jets' running totals never reached those thresholds again during his tenure. Combine that with inconsistent quarterback play, and the Jets missed the playoffs each of his final four years.

SECOND-ROUND GEMS The Bills did not have a first-round pick due to last season's trade with Cleveland to take receiver Sammy Watkins. Their top pick, 50th overall, was Florida State cornerback Ronald Darby in the second round. But Buffalo has a history of finding talent in the second round, led by guard Billy Shaw and running back Thurman Thomas, two members of the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

SUPER MARIO After signing a $100-million free agent contract in 2012, Mario Williams had a quiet 10.5 sacks for the Bills that season and faced ridicule from fans who felt he wasn't worth that kind of money. But he's been a force to be reckoned with his last two seasons, notching 13 and 14.5 sacks, respectively. He joins Buffalo legend and Hall of Famer Bruce Smith as the only Bills with two seasons of at least 13 sacks.

Depth in the front seven is one reason Buffalo was able to deal star middle linebacker Kiko Alonso, who missed last season with a knee injury, to the Eagles for McCoy. The linebacker corps features young talents in Preston Brown, who led the team in tackles as a rookie with 109, and Nigel Bradham, who had 104. Ty Powell, Randell Johnson and rookie sixth-round pick Tony Steward will battle it out for playing time.

In the secondary, the Bills lost starters Jairus Byrd and Da'Norris Searcy the past two years in free agency but still have plenty on hand. The corner spots are manned by former first-round picks Stephon Gilmore and Leodis McKelvin, who combined for seven interceptions last year. McKelvin was having a strong season until sitting out the final six games with a broken ankle. Stepping in superbly was veteran Corey Graham, a free-agent signee who finished with a team-high 15 passes defended.

MARCELL DAREUS, DL

Aaron Williams, a 2011 second-round pick and former corner, has blossomed at strong safety and chipped in 76 tackles and five pass breakups. Third-year man Duke Williams will get the nod to replace Searcy at the free spot. Overall depth in the secondary remains a team strength, led by the likes of Ron Brooks, Nickell Robey and Bacarri Rambo, who intercepted Green Bay's Aaron Rodgers twice in a game last year. Things got even better when Buffalo spent its top pick in the draft on Florida State cornerback Ronald Darby.

SPECIALISTS Placekicker Dan Carpenter set a franchise record with 34 field goals. The former Miami Dolphin has embraced the challenging weather conditions of Ralph Wilson Stadium. With Jordan Gay handling kickoffs, Carpenter can focus solely on the uprights. Punter Colton Schmidt was an August waiver find, and the California native also found an unlikely home, averaging 42.9 yards an effort with 31 dropped inside the 20. Return specialist Marcus Thigpen returns to handle punts and kickoffs.

FINAL ANALYSIS Ryan is the biggest coaching hire in Buffalo since Chuck Knox in the late 1970s, and expectations are high that the NFL's longest playoff drought will come to an end at 15 seasons. Nobody's toppling New England in the AFC East as long as Tom Brady is slinging passes, and landing a wild-card spot will take at least 10 wins. But the Bills got to nine last year and could finally knock down the door.

Last season's trade with Cleveland to select wide receiver Sammy Watkins cost Buffalo its first- and fourth-round picks in 2015. Given that kind of hit, the team's brain trust doesn't expect to find two or three immediate starters like past draft classes produced. However, Ronald Darby is the type of aggressive, sure-tackling cornerback that's needed to play Rex Ryan's press-style defense. He could contribute in special packages with an eye on replacing veteran Leodis McKelvin down the road. John Miller, a mauler from a Louisville program that produces technically sound blockers, has the best opportunity to start at a position that's wide open. Karlos Williams had a disappointing senior season at Florida State but averaged 8.0 yards per carry as a junior. Nick O'Leary, also a former Seminole, was highly productive as a pass-catching tight end. The grandson of golfing legend Jack Nicklaus caught 48 passes for 618 yards as a senior. Dezmin Lewis played at a small school but came up big against top competition.

SCOUTING THE BILLS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP BUFFALO "GM Doug Whaley and the organization have continued with their aggressive tactics to try and add more talent to this roster. They traded for LeSean McCoy and Matt Cassel, signed Charles Clay to an offer sheet as a restricted free agent, inked Richie Incognito and also brought Percy Harvin into the fold. And yet, the question still remains, is EJ Manuel the long-term answer at QB? If he's not, Cassel will serve as a stop-gap insurance policy. ... The OL is really ordinary to below average without a single big-time starter, although offseason reports indicate that left tackle Cordy Glenn is in the best shape of his career. ... Their defense is outstanding with quality players across the front, including tackles Marcell Dareus and Kyle Williams, plus edge rushers Mario Williams and Jerry Hughes. ... Buffalo gave up linebacker Kiko Alonso in the McCoy trade, but he missed the entire 2014 season with an ACL, and the D still finished fourth overall and first in third-down defense. ... The corners, Stephon Gilmore and Leodis McKelvin, should give Rex Ryan and defensive coordinator Dennis Thurman the freedom to use their pressure packages, while they added Florida State corner Ronald Darby in the second round as a potential nickel. ... With Rex's energy and ability to motivate, don't be surprised to see the Bills pull the new pieces together and break their 15-year playoff drought."

Once among the perennial elite, the Dolphins have been largely irrelevant for quite a while now, without a playoff win since Dec. 30, 2000. While the fans are long past impatient, owner Stephen Ross leaned toward a youth movement in the offseason. "I wouldn't want to be getting old veterans to win that year and then get back to where we were," Ross says. "I want to build something that is going to be a dynasty that people want to see year in and year out."

That's not to say Ross spent the past several months sitting idle. Yes, he kept his embattled coach, Joe Philbin, and Philbin kept both of his coordinators, Bill Lazor on offense and Kevin Coyle on defense. But the front office was overhauled, with former Jets executive Mike Tannenbaum hired to oversee an operation that still includes general manager Dennis Hickey. And the team may have as many as 10 new starters, including the prize of the free-agent market, defensive tackle Ndamukong Suh, who signed a six-year, $114 million contract with nearly $60 million guaranteed. "This is obviously a great day," Suh said at his introductory press conference. "And there's obviously many more to come after that."

How soon? We'll see.

OFFENSE It got largely lost due to the team's lack of overall progress, but the Dolphins did make gains on offense last season, with their best yardage ranking (14th) since 2008 and best points ranking (11th) since 2001, which happen to be the franchise's last two playoff seasons.

They should make more strides, now that Lazor has had more than a year to implement his schemes — with some use of the read option — and increase the unit's tempo, something that didn't occur as planned last season. Much of that will fall on Ryan Tannehill, who seems to be a quarterback on the rise. "The good news is he's gotten better every year," Philbin says.

That's supported by the statistics, as the third-year player posted his highest passer rating (92.8) largely due to a dramatic increase in completion percentage (60.4 to 66.4). And yet, his yards-per-completion continued its decline, from 11.7 as a rookie to 11.0 in his second season to 10.3 in his third. While it wise for the Dolphins to play to his strengths, Tannehill still needs to become more accurate with his deep throws to make the Dolphins a truly dynamic attack.

He won't be trying to connect with Mike Wallace anymore. After two expensive and uneven seasons, Wallace was sent to Minnesota to make way for a younger, cheaper core. Miami will have three receivers in their regular rotation who are under 24 years old, including Kenny Stills, a speedy import from New Orleans who had 63 catches on 85 targets last season, compared to 67 on 115 for Wallace.

Stills' presence on the outside, along with the development of first-round pick DeVante Parker, should allow Jarvis Landry and new tight end Jordan Cameron to exploit the middle. As a rookie, the hard-working Landry showed terrific instincts and good hands, catching 84 passes, albeit for just 9.0 yards per catch. That number should increase, if Tannehill can sit back in the pocket a little longer — he took 46 sacks, down 12 from the previous season but still too high. It's remarkable that Tannehill has started every game in three straight seasons.

Branden Albert solidified the left tackle spot prior to a season-ending knee injury, so his return to full health is critical. With Albert, center Mike Pouncey (newly signed to a lucrative extension) and right tackle Ja'Wuan James (coming off a good rookie season), Miami appears settled at three spots. The guard spots are in flux; the Dolphins may need fourth-round rookie Jamil Douglas to step in immediately.

They'll be blocking for Lamar Miller, who had some ups and downs after taking over as the primary ball carrier. Miller, however, finished strong with 270 yards in the season's final two weeks. Now the question is whether he can handle an even greater load; he averaged 5.1 yards per carry but never had more than 19 attempts. There's questionable depth at the position.

DEFENSE Coming off a tumultuous season — with players questioning the coordinator (Coyle) — the Dolphins invested heavily in Suh to instill some fear in opposing offenses. While he's created controversy with some of his on-field antics, there's never been any question about Suh's ability, not only to disrupt running and passing plays but also to make his teammates better. A few of his teammates are already pretty good, notably defensive ends Cameron Wake (57.5 sacks over the past five seasons) and Olivier Vernon (18 sacks over the past two seasons), cornerback Brent Grimes (coming off two straight Pro Bowls) and safety Reshad Jones (who had a bounce-back year). And defensive tackle Earl Mitchell should be

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

IN THE AIR TONIGHT Greg Jennings teased some during his free agent visits, tweeting about a Jaguar dealership while visiting Jacksonville. But, after picking Miami, he tweeted a photo of himself dressed (short afro and all) as a smiling Ricardo Tubbs from the 1980s hit, "Miami Vice." In the photoshopped post, quarterback Ryan Tannehill looked like a confused version of Sonny Crockett.

TIME TO TAKE THE TOWN? The Dolphins' popularity has waned in recent years due to a prolonged period of mediocrity and the presence of LeBron James on the Heat. But with James gone, the Heat missed the playoffs for the first time since 2008, meaning all four pro teams in South Florida fell short of the postseason in their most recent cycle. That makes the area ripe for a football revival.

CAREER IN OVERDRIVE The Uber app is popular with many athletes who use it instead of cabs. But most use it for rides. A.J. Francis, a backup defensive tackle, took a different approach this offseason, applying to be a driver. As he explained to his Twitter followers, "You know what's better than NFL money? More money." Francis told The Ticket Miami, a sports radio station, that he hoped he got to pick up some teammates because he knew they would be able to pay.

TUNA SQUISH Bill Parcells ran the Dolphins' drafts in 2008 and 2009, and the current regime's release of receiver Brian Hartline means that not a single player remains from either of Parcells' two draft classes. Ten of the 18 players were on NFL rosters at some point last season.

NEW LOOK FOR OLD HOME This offseason, the Dolphins embarked on a $400 million renovation to what, since 2010, has been called Sun Life Stadium. The project replaced all the old seats, while reducing capacity to 65,000 and adding VIP "living rooms." Fans will be 25 feet closer to the field, as the franchise tries to create a modernized version of the rowdier Orange Bowl environment.

GOOD RIDDANCE? During an interview with CBS 4 in Miami, Dolphins center Mike Pouncey and his brother, Steelers center Maurkice Pouncey, seemed to take shots at former Dolphins receiver Mike Wallace, who was either benched or simply quit prior to the second half of Miami's last regular-season game. Mike said: "It was the right move for everybody." Maurkice added: "In my opinion, he's a coward." But since the aired clip didn't include the question, the Pounceys later denied they were talking about Wallace.

a solid complement to Suh, holding up blockers and helping to stuff the run.

But plenty of others will need to exceed expectations for the Dolphins to improve from their 2014 rankings (20th in points, 12th in yardage). That starts with the entire linebacker group. Koa Misi is serviceable in the middle, and Jelani Jenkins was a positive surprise as a fourth-round pick in 2013. But there's no clear playmaker in the group, especially after the Dion Jordan experiment failed. Jordan, the No. 3 pick in the 2013 draft, was a disappointment for two seasons and will miss the 2015 campaign due to a failed drug test.

In the secondary, veteran safety Louis Delmas returns after ACL surgery, and either Jamar Taylor or Will Davis will need to emerge as a consistent complement to Grimes at corner to allow newcomer Brice McCain play the nickel. Miami allowed opposing quarterbacks to compile an 89.7 passer rating last season, with 27 touchdowns and 14 interceptions — not the league's worst, but not contender material.

CAMERON WAKE, DE

SPECIALISTS Two seasons into his NFL career, Caleb Sturgis still hasn't cemented his status, not after making 77.5 percent of his field-goal attempts, including 20-of-33 from 40 yards or more. If he's not better, he'll likely be replaced. Brandon Fields didn't have his best season, with his lowest percentage (36.2) of punts inside the 20-yard-line since 2009, and he was in danger of being released prior to restructuring his contract. Landry was the primary punt and kickoff returner last season and — a couple of hiccups aside — did decent work. Ideally, though, the Dolphins would like more of a burner at those spots to save Landry for his receiving duties. So that search will continue.

FINAL ANALYSIS The Dolphins have been stuck in the middle, or just below, for so long that it's hard to predict anything better than a .500 finish. But if Tannehill can make another leap, and Suh can energize what was at times a listless defense, there's potential here to squeak out 10 wins. Philbin may need that many to retain his job, even though Ross signed the coach to an extension through 2016 to remove the perception of lame-duck status. "There has to be improvement," Ross added, after the announcement. "I'm looking to make the playoffs, and I think Joe is looking to make the playoffs." Otherwise, this team may look even more different in 2016.

After trading Mike Wallace, Miami needed another outside target to allow Jarvis Landry to work from the slot. The Dolphins stayed put in their draft position and took the physical DeVante Parker, whose measurables suggest that he can be a star. They'll need him to live up to that potential, and preferably soon. The Dolphins moved down and took defensive tackle Jordan Phillips, an Oklahoma Sooner who has first-round talent — with unusual athleticism for his size but also an inconsistent motor. Jamil Douglas will compete at left guard. Bobby McCain and Jay Ajayi both had knee trouble in college. McCain will compete for a role in the nickel package, while Ajayi, who was highly productive as the feature back at Boise State, will try to prove that he can be the power complement to Lamar Miller. Tony Lippett had a monster senior season at Michigan State, averaging 18.4 yards on his 65 receptions for 1,198 yards and 11 touchdowns.

SCOUTING THE DOLPHINS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP MIAMI "Owner Stephen Ross brought in former NY Jets GM Mike Tannenbaum to evaluate and determine the fates of head coach Joe Philbin and GM Dennis Hickey following the 2015 season. ... It's a one-year trial for them and a huge season for Ryan Tannehill. ... The Dolphins wanted to make a splash, and they did so in free agency by signing Ndamukong Suh to the richest defensive player deal in league history. He is a major talent, and the expectation is that he will help control the run game and pressure the interior of the pocket, especially against New England. ... Defensive ends Cameron Wake and Olivier Vernon are maybe the most underrated pair of pass rushers in the league, but the linebackers are second-rate, and someone has to step up at corner opposite of Brent Grimes. ... Offensively, Miami lost tight end Charles Clay as a restricted free agent to Buffalo. He is a significant loss for Tannehill because the Dolphins also shipped Mike Wallace to Minnesota. ... None of their running backs scare anybody, so Boise State product Jay Ajayi could get on the field right away despite a knee issue that deflated his draft stock. ... Jarvis Landry was a nice second-round find last year out of LSU and caught 84 passes as a rookie, but the hope is that No. 1 pick DeVante Parker can become the complete receiver Tannehill has lacked."

The Patriots have been a part of the NFL's ruling class for the better part of the last 14 seasons, winning 12 AFC East titles, six conference titles and four Super Bowls. The AFC has long taken aim at Tom Brady, Bill Belichick and Co., and it appeared the Patriots were on the ropes last season at 2–2 after a 41–14 dismantling in Kansas City. Brady looked old, Rob Gronkowski wasn't 100 percent, the offensive line was in disarray and the defense was below average.

But New England rose from the dead, won its sixth straight division title and captured its fourth Super Bowl title in thrilling fashion against the Seahawks. The Patriots remain an upper-echelon team, but free agency took a serious toll on the defense. And perennial Pro Bowlers Ndamukong Suh (Dolphins), LeSean McCoy (Bills), Brandon Marshall (Jets) and Darrelle Revis (Jets) all joined division rivals in the offseason. The Pats are AFC East favorites, but the gap is narrowing.

OFFENSE Brady, the three-time Super Bowl MVP, will turn 38 in the preseason. His dedication to fitness has allowed him to maintain his elite level of production and has even improved his one major weakness — mobility. Brady picked up 11 first downs on the ground in 2014, his second-highest total of the last six seasons, and he was more willing to scramble than in previous years.

With Brady supsended for up to four games to start the 2015 season, the Patriots can turn to Jimmy Garoppolo, the team's second-round pick in 2014 who threw 27 passes as a rookie, or they could sign a veteran to plug into the lineup as a stopgap.

If Brady is the No. 1 piece to the Patriots offense, Gronkowski stands firmly at 1A. The big tight end from the University of Arizona has had an enormous effect on the team — when healthy. The best illustration of his impact may have been last fall. Gronkowski played less than half the snaps in the first four games of the season as he continued to recover from knee surgery, and he sat out the season finale against Buffalo when the Patriots had wrapped up the No. 1 seed. In those five games, the Patriots averaged 17.8 points and went 2–3. In their other 14 games, including the playoffs, the Patriots averaged 34.8 points and went 13–1.

The threat of Gronkowski makes the receiving corps of Julian Edelman, Brandon LaFell and Danny Amendola much more dangerous than it would otherwise be, as defenses dedicate multiple linebackers and/or safeties to him. The Patriots added another receiving tight end in the offseason, signing Scott Chandler from Buffalo. Tim Wright never emerged as the second receiving tight end Belichick likes to feature after the Pats traded Logan Mankins for him, so look for Chandler to get that chance.

The offensive line is missing one starter in Dan Connolly, who started at guard but also saw time at center. Connolly remains a free agent, and the Patriots could bring him back. Tackles Nate Solder and Sebastian Vollmer and center Bryan Stork are all plus-players at their positions. Guard play is a bit of an issue.

At running back, the Patriots lost Shane Vereen and Stevan Ridley in free agency. Vereen emerged as a critical piece of the offensive arsenal, outgrowing his third-down role and becoming an every-down contributor. He played three times the snaps of any other running back on the team in the regular season and 50 of the 74 snaps in the Super Bowl, according to ESPNBoston. James White is the early candidate to be the pass-catching, third-down back, while LeGarrette Blount, Jonas Gray and Brandon Bolden will handle the work between the tackles.

DEFENSE Three key starters departed in free agency, leaving some significant questions as the season approaches. Revis (Jets) and fellow cornerback Brandon Browner (Saints) will need to be replaced, and the defensive philosophy the Patriots employed the last three seasons will likely be altered as well. With Revis last season and Aqib Talib in 2012 and '13, the Patriots had a lockdown corner who allowed them to play man-to-man on the opponent's best receiver and let the rest of the secondary handle the remainder of the field. Logan Ryan and Super Bowl hero Malcolm Butler are not in the class of Revis or Talib, so expect much more zone. The Patriots did invest in safety Devin McCourty with a five-year contract, and fellow safety Patrick Chung was also re-signed, but the cornerback situation bears watching.

Defensive tackle Vince Wilfork is the third starter who needs to be replaced after he departed for Houston after a highly successful 11-year run in New England that included five Pro Bowls. The 325-pounder bounced back from a ruptured Achilles in 2013 and played

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

TOP BILLING Bill Belichick has 22 career playoff victories, which are more than the combined total of two Hall of Fame coaches who also have the first name Bill. Bill Walsh, who coached the 49ers to three Super Bowl titles in 10 years, recorded 10 playoff wins. Bill Parcells, who won two Super Bowls with the Giants, won 11 playoff games in his 19 years as a head coach. Belichick and Parcells matched up once in the playoffs, with Belichick's Browns defeating Parcells' Patriots 20–13 in January 1995.

YES, THEY WILL MEET AGAIN Tom Brady and Peyton Manning are scheduled to meet for the 17th time on Nov. 29 when the Patriots visit Denver. Brady holds an 11–5 edge over Manning, including 3–1 since Manning joined the Broncos. Manning's lone win with Denver, however, was in the AFC Championship Game in 2013. The home QB has won the last six matchups. Brady or Manning has represented the AFC in the Super Bowl in nine of the last 14 years.

A BUSY BUTLER So what happens when you go from anonymity to Super Bowl hero? Malcolm Butler found out after making the game-saving interception against the Seahawks at the goal line with 20 seconds left. There were appearances on "SportsCenter," of course, but also "Good Morning America" and "The Today Show." He also went to Disneyland with Julian Edelman, then presented an award at the Grammys with Edelman and actor Josh Duhamel. He was honored with Malcolm Butler Day at the University of West Alabama and was given a parade in his hometown of Vicksburg, Miss. He dropped the puck at an AHL game in Worcester, Mass., before an autograph session, and wrapped up his offseason with the birth of his first son 11 days before the Patriots' trip to the White House in late April.

SUPER TOM Brady's four-touchdown performance in the Super Bowl gave him the all-time lead in Super Bowl touchdown passes with 13, surpassing his boyhood idol, Joe Montana. Other Brady Super Bowl records: Most starts by a QB (six), career passing yards (1,605), career completions (164), single-game completions (37 vs. Seattle) and career attempts (247).

LIMPING TO THE FINISH Under Belichick, the Patriots have struggled protecting fourth-quarter leads in the Super Bowl and almost blew another in February. New England has surrendered a touchdown on eight of 14 possessions (57 percent) in such situations, compared with eight TDs on the other 50 possessions in the six Super Bowls (16 percent).

74 percent of the defensive snaps, far and away New England's leader along the line. First-round draft pick Malcom Brown will be given an opportunity to step right in and compete with veterans Sealver Siliga and Alan Branch. Second-year pro Dominique Easley will be expected to take a larger role at the other defensive tackle spot. Rob Ninkovich and Chandler Jones are back at defensive end, two players who have had their moments but can also disappear for stretches.

The Patriots' starting linebacker corps is loaded after Jerod Mayo decided to restructure his deal and return to the team after the second of his two injury-shortened seasons. With Mayo, Jamie Collins and Dont'a Hightower, the Patriots have one of the finest starting trios in the NFL. Hightower was tremendous after Mayo went down after six games, and the athletic Collins continues to improve all aspects of his game and appears on his way to a Pro Bowl very soon.

JULIAN EDELMAN, WR

SPECIALISTS The Patriots are in very good shape in all aspects of their special teams. Stephen Gostkowski has been incredibly accurate the past two seasons, connecting on 73-of-78 field goals (including 6-of-7 from beyond 50). Edelman is the NFL's active leader in punt return average at 12.3 yards per return, and Amendola proved to be a serviceable kickoff return man when he took over halfway through last season (24.9-yard average). The Patriots were 11th in net punting with left-footed Ryan Allen at the controls.

FINAL ANALYSIS On paper, the Patriots do not appear to be as good as last season's Super Bowl champions, but no AFC team can safely be called an overwhelming favorite. Brady has shown no signs of slowing down, and his top receiving targets will all be back except for Vereen. Expect the offense, with a healthy Gronkowski, to continue to produce at a high level. The question is whether the defense can be championship-quality. After ranking 25th or worse in total defense every year from 2010-13, the Patriots improved to 13th last season with the addition of Revis. Will they regress without him, or will a strong linebacking corps continue the improvement? It will be Belichick's challenge to try to win without a shutdown corner. The goal for the Patriots should be to secure a first-round bye for the sixth straight year and be in the mix for a return trip to the Super Bowl.

The Patriots combined value and need with Malcom Brown. The versatile defensive tackle was projected to be a mid-first-round selection, but he was still on the board at No. 32. Jordan Richards was viewed as a bit of a reach in the second round at a safety position where the Patriots have two starters returning. Overall, the Patriots went heavy on the line of scrimmage, with five of their first six picks on either the offensive or defensive line. Cornerback was surprisingly not addressed until the seventh round, and there were no wide receivers selected, two positions that lack depth. The Patriots filled their long-snapper hole with fifth-rounder Joe Cardona, but he may have an obligation to serve in the Navy.

SCOUTING THE PATRIOTS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP NEW ENGLAND "Julian Edelman and Brandon LaFell complement each other well and became reliable targets in conjunction with Rob Gronkowski. It remains to be seen if Aaron Dobson can become a player, but with their offensive line in need of interior help, they added Tre' Jackson and Shaq Mason in the fourth round of the draft. ... The Pats face three formidable fronts within the division as all of their opponents want to attack the base of the pocket and make Tom Brady move off his spot. ... LeGarrette Blount will miss the opener, and they let Shane Vereen depart in free agency, but Travaris Cadet was signed from the Saints, and there is great hope for James White to become a factor in 2015. ... They have gotten amazing mileage out of their linebacker corps in the absence of Jerod Mayo over the past two years. Jamie Collins is the most versatile piece of their defensive strategy and has become a top player at his position. Dont'a Hightower is finally playing to his potential and reminds you of a 1980s New York Giants linebacker. ... Rob Ninkovich has thrived because of his motor, technique and scheme fit. ... They did not exercise the Derrelle Revis option, Brandon Browner signed with the Saints, and they didn't address the position during the offseason."

With a new general manager and new head coach, will the Jets look like a new team in 2015?

While it's not as simple as overhauling the front office, coaching staff and secondary, the Jets this offseason made plenty of moves in the right direction as they try to put last season's 4–12 misery behind them. New GM Mike Maccagnan was aggressive in free agency, as he upgraded the Jets' beleaguered defensive backfield. So far, new head coach Todd Bowles has brought a more businesslike approach to the organization than his predecessor, Rex Ryan.

The Jets did some great things under Ryan. They made the AFC Championship Game in each of his first two seasons, 2009 and 2010. But they haven't made the playoffs since, and they are 26–38 during this four-year slide, with zero winning records.

But there's still a nagging question surrounding this team: For as promising as the Jets' new secondary looks, their quarterback situation is still a giant question mark. Can they overcome that and be a legitimate factor in 2015?

FIVE-YEAR WIN TREND

OFFENSE The Jets should be able to run the ball. That hasn't been an issue in recent seasons. Power running back Chris Ivory is still around. He has rushed for 833 and 821 yards, respectively, in his two seasons with the team. And the Jets added Stevan Ridley in free agency, though you have to wonder if he can return to his old form after last season's torn ACL and MCL. The Jets still lack a back with breakaway speed.

A bigger issue for this team is the passing game. The past three seasons, the Jets ranked 32nd, 31st and 30th in the NFL in passing offense. Nowhere to go but up, right? In two seasons, quarterback Geno Smith has 41 turnovers, including 34 interceptions. It is time for him to take a step forward with his decision-making in 2015.

The Jets traded for Ryan Fitzpatrick in the offseason, and he will compete for the starting job with Smith. Fitzpatrick is competent enough, but if he beats out Smith in training camp — or replaces him during the season — the Jets will be in the market for a quarterback after this season, as they will almost certainly dump Smith.

Trading for Brandon Marshall this offseason gives the Jets a big-bodied wide receiver who can be a red-zone threat, even if he isn't as effective overall as he was earlier in his career. Marshall had a streak of seven straight seasons with at least 1,000 yards receiving snapped last fall. The Jets have been pitiful in the red zone recently, ranking 32nd, 27th and 25th in the NFL the past three seasons in red-zone efficiency.

The Jets' second-round draft pick, Ohio State's Devin Smith, is a deep-threat receiver, and maybe nothing more. But he could help stretch the field and force defenses to play more honest coverage against Marshall and Eric Decker.

DEFENSE The secondary was, by far, the Jets' biggest defensive shortcoming last season. Maccagnan went out and signed two new cornerbacks — familiar faces Darrelle Revis and Antonio Cromartie — and acquired a free safety, Marcus Gilchrist. The latter should allow second-year pro Calvin Pryor (last year's first-round pick) to play closer to the line of scrimmage as a strong safety, where he is most comfortable. Maccagnan also signed corner Buster Skrine in free agency.

Between the revamped secondary and the already strong defensive line, the Jets have a chance to be one of the NFL's top defenses. Sheldon Richardson and Muhammad Wilkerson are two of the league's best young defensive linemen. Then the Jets saw USC defensive lineman Leonard Williams (maybe the best overall player in the draft) fall into their lap with the No. 6 pick, which creates an issue for Bowles: How does he deploy all these linemen? It's a good problem to have.

A bigger issue for the Jets comes at the edge rusher/outside linebacker spot in their 3-4 defense. Strong-side linebacker Calvin Pace turns 35 in October. Backup rush linebacker Jason Babin, a pass-rushing specialist, is already 35. The Jets would love for Quinton Coples, their 2012 first-round pick, to develop as a rush linebacker. But he has disappointed so far in his career. He has 16.5 sacks in three seasons, with a high of 6.5 last fall.

The Jets' defense wasn't terrible last season under Ryan. The unit finished sixth in the league in yards allowed but was 24th in points allowed and 26th in red-zone defense. Having a better secondary — and a dominant corner like Revis — should help improve those latter two stats.

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

GETTING AROUND TOWN Defensive lineman Leonard Williams, the Jets' first-round draft pick (No. 6 overall selection), doesn't have a driver's license. During his college days at USC, he lived close to campus and got around by riding his long-board skateboard. He knows that won't work with the Jets, whose training facility is in suburban New Jersey. "I'm definitely going to get a car now," he says.

OVERCOMING THE ODDS The Jets picked outside linebacker Lorenzo Mauldin of Louisville in the third round. He has an inspirational story. His parents were in and out of jail, so he entered foster care at age 2. He spent time in 16 different foster homes during his youth. After the Jets drafted Mauldin, he broke down in tears during a conference call with reporters. "This is my chance to show everybody that I can do what I do, and I'm going to do it beyond what I can do," he said. Mauldin had also gotten emotional upon receiving his college diploma. "It makes me feel really good," Mauldin told ESPN about his graduation. "If there were other words that I could say, I would say them. I'm glad I can put smiles on people's faces. I'm glad that I can make people's days. I'm just blessed."

ALL IN THE FAMILY Last season, the Jets' rookie tight end, Jace Amaro out of Texas Tech, had some assistance as he transitioned to life in the NFL. His older sister, Manae, lived with him and was actually employed by him, as his public relations representative. Amaro's father is a CPA, so he advised Amaro to form his own LLC when he turned pro. Amaro pays his sister through that LLC, Jace Amaro Enterprises.

CHARITY TRAVELER Tight end Zach Sudfeld has traveled to Africa, Thailand and Romania to work with his family's charity organization, Assist International, which does humanitarian aid work. It was founded by Sudfeld's grandfather, a minister.

BEAR DOWN Every spring, linebacker Jason Babin heads up to Alaska and goes black bear hunting. Last year, he took his 9-year-old son, who shot his first bear. Babin says his son even skinned the bear, with a little help.

HUMBLE BEGINNINGS Nose tackle Damon Harrison used to work at Walmart, as a night stocker, between leaving junior college and enrolling at NAIA school William Penn. Now, he frequently visits the Walmart near the Jets' complex. The workers at that Walmart know him well, and they often come up to say hello. During a visit last fall, Harrison says, "I was showing them: I used to work over here. I started off in cosmetics."

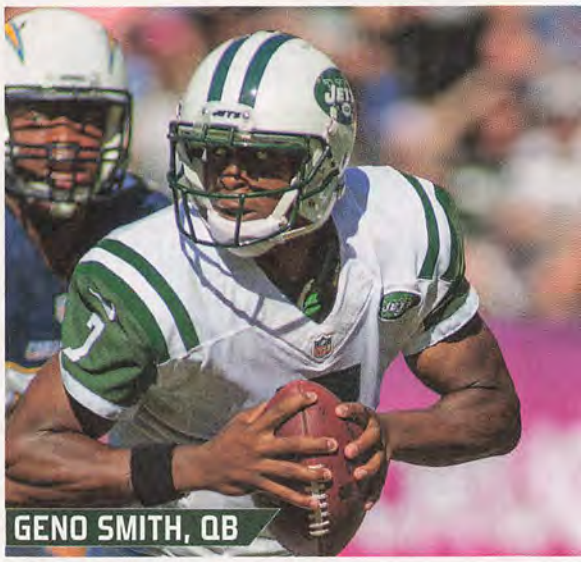
SPECIALISTS Nick Folk is back as the Jets' kicker and Ryan Quigley returns as the punter. This will be Folk's sixth year with the Jets, and Quigley's third season. Folk wasn't as good last season (32-of-39 on field goals) as he was in 2013 (33-of-36), though three of his misses last season came on kicks of 50 yards or longer. Quigley last season ranked 14th in the NFL (45.9-yard average), after ranking 17th in 2013 (45.5).

Worth noting: The Jets this season will have a different special teams coach for the fourth straight year, as longtime special teams coach Bobby April arrives, following Thomas McGaughey, Ben Kotwica and Mike Westhoff, a special teams coaching pioneer. Receiver Jeremy Kerley seems likely to return punts again, though the Jets have options there, just as they do at the kickoff return spot. It will be interesting to see if they give Smith, their blazing-fast rookie receiver, a shot on kickoff returns. He dabbled in them during his time at Ohio State.



GENO SMITH, QB

FINAL ANALYSIS You can't win in today's NFL unless you have at least competent quarterback play. And there have been plenty of times over the past two seasons when Smith has looked totally incompetent under center. In fact, it's been a long time since the organization has enjoyed steady, reliable play at the most important position on the field.

So that's what it boils down to for these Jets: Unless Smith takes a step forward in 2015, or Fitzpatrick performs well as his replacement, it's hard to envision this team being anything better than average.

Yes, the defense has a chance to be elite, with stars such as Revis and Wilkerson and Richardson. Yes, the Jets should be able to run the ball well, presuming their aging — but still not yet crumbling — offensive line holds up. But without a better passing game, the Jets will probably hover around 7–9 to 9–7. The latter wouldn't be all that bad for a team coming off 4–12 with a rookie head coach. Either way, look for the Jets to be in the hunt for a playoff spot entering December. This team isn't going to start 1–8 like last year's group did.

Keep an eye on the final three games, though — at Dallas, home against New England and at Buffalo. With a playoff spot potentially on the line, those challenges could prove too daunting for a team in transition.

JETS IN THE DRAFT

A

RD	PLAYER	POS	HT	WT	COLLEGE
1.	Leonard Williams	DL	6-4	302	USC
2.	Devin Smith	WR	6-0	196	Ohio State
3.	Lorenzo Mauldin	OLB	6-34	259	Louisville
4.	Bryce Petty	QB	6-3	230	Baylor
5.	Jarvis Harrison	OG	6-4	330	Texas A&M
7.	Deon Simon	NT	6-4	321	Northwestern St.

Because of how well the Jets addressed their needs in free agency, none of their draft picks will be forced to start in 2015. Leonard Williams could be a factor, though. The Jets were fortunate that Williams fell to them at the No. 6 pick, since he could wind up being an elite player, but he should be allowed some time to develop. Ditto for Devin Smith, who could be the deep threat the Jets need to make room for Eric Decker. Smith averaged an amazing 28.2 yards per reception as a senior for the national champion Buckeyes, and 12 of his 33 catches went for touchdowns. Lorenzo Mauldin provides youth at a position that needs it. Bryce Petty, a spread offense quarterback in college, is a project who will have to prove he can operate in a pro-style attack. Don't expect him to contribute in any meaningful way in 2015. Jarvis Harrison started 38 career games at three different positions on the line for Texas A&M, most of them at left guard. Deon Simon has power and potential as a run-stuffing nose tackle.

SCOUTING THE JETS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP NEW YORK "Defensively, they brought back the cornerback tandem of Darrelle Revis and Antonio Cromartie, plus signed Buster Skrine from Cleveland and safety Marcus Gilchrist from San Diego. Those moves speak volumes about their faith in former No. 1 pick Dee Milliner as he now sits as the fourth corner. ... The front seven should be very good again with Muhammad Wilkerson, Sheldon Richardson and emerging linebacker Demario Davis as the primary playmakers up front. ... And despite the defensive line being the strongest unit on their team, give GM Mike Maccagnan credit for taking the 'best available' player in USC's Leonard Williams, who fell in their laps at pick No. 6. ... Geno Smith is the biggest unknown on this football team, and the new regime drafted an excellent developmental candidate in Baylor's Bryce Petty. ... They traded for Brandon Marshall, who will play for his fourth team in 10 years. In spite of his career production, it's hard to predict how this chapter will play out. ... The offensive line should be steady with James Carpenter being brought in from Seattle, but D'Brickashaw Ferguson and Nick Mangold have played their best football in the past. ... Everything truly hinges on the QB play and what new offensive coordinator Chan Gailey can create with a bottom-half-of-the-league group of skill players."

When the Baltimore Ravens trudged out of the locker room at Gillette Stadium following a bitter playoff loss to the New England Patriots, feisty veteran wide receiver Steve Smith vowed they'd be back and that the outcome would be different the next time.

Following an offseason defined by change — offensive coordinator Gary Kubiak left to become the Denver Broncos' head coach; defensive tackle Haloti Ngata was traded to the Detroit Lions; and wide receiver Torrey Smith and pass rusher Pernell McPhee departed as free agents — the Ravens are confident that their roster is well stocked to make another serious playoff run.

The Ravens have made the playoffs six of the past seven years under coach John Harbaugh and are upbeat about their prospects following a strong draft that filled several needs. That included drafting UCF wide receiver Breshad Perriman (a bigger, faster version of Torrey Smith) in the first round and tight end Maxx Williams in the second.

Although the Ravens weren't particularly active in free agency due to a tight salary cap situation, general manager Ozzie Newsome cautions that he's not done building the roster.

OFFENSE Although he is never among the first names mentioned in conversations about top NFL quarterbacks, Joe Flacco is a strong-armed, accurate, mobile QB who owns a Super Bowl ring and a $120.6 million contract. Flacco improved significantly under Kubiak a year ago. Now, he'll collaborate with new offensive coordinator Marc Trestman to try to capitalize on his arm strength in more of a vertical passing game. Flacco has a faster deep threat to work with in Perriman than Smith, who was no slouch. Flacco could still stand to improve on his deep-ball accuracy but has matured into a sharp football mind who makes sound decisions and gets the football out of his hands quickly. Matt Schaub is Flacco's new backup.

Justin Forsett has transformed his NFL reputation from undersized journeyman to featured back. Forsett was rewarded with a three-year, $9 million contract. He'll remain the primary back despite the Ravens drafting USC running back Javorius "Buck" Allen, a big back with pass-catching skills. Lorenzo Taliaferro is in the mix as a red-zone presence but has to concentrate on avoiding the fumbles that sent him to the bench as a rookie.

Despite being 36 years old and entering his 15th NFL season, Steve Smith remains fast enough to create separation. He's still physical and combative after the catch, not conceding anything and challenging defensive backs every snap. Smith will be targeted frequently, but Marlon Brown, Michael Campanaro and Kamar Aiken will also be involved.

Williams is expected to have an immediate impact in a passing game that has sorely missed the presence of Dennis Pitta over the past two seasons as he has twice fractured and dislocated his right hip. Pitta's career is in doubt.

The offensive line represents one of the major strengths of the team. Flacco was sacked only 19 times last year, and all five starters are back. Powerful left guard Kelechi Osemele and gritty veteran right guard Marshal Yanda are entering contract years and are competing for one big deal with at least one expected to leave after this season. Center Jeremy Zuttah's size and athleticism represent a major upgrade over Gino Gradkowski, a former starter traded to the Broncos. Left tackle Eugene Monroe is coming off a disappointing season in which he struggled in pass protection and didn't have as much punch as a blocker after undergoing arthroscopic knee surgery. Rick Wagner emerged as one of the NFL's top right tackles, utilizing his strength and sound technique to wall off pass rushers. The top backup is John Urschel, a math whiz from Penn State who can play both guard spots and center in a pinch.

DEFENSE Defensive coordinator Dean Pees' aggressive 3-4 scheme creates a lot of pressure without blitzing with an emphasis on getting outside linebackers Elvis Dumervil and Terrell Suggs isolated in one-on-one blocking situations. Dumervil and Suggs combined for 29 sacks last season as one of the most formidable pass-rushing tandems in the game.

Ngata was a disruptive force who will be replaced by Timmy Jernigan. Jernigan showed flashes of being a capable full-time starter with four sacks as a rookie. He needs to be more consistent, though, and maintain his intensity. Built low to the ground and with the ability to bench press more than 500 pounds, massive lineman Brandon Williams is one of the top nose tackles in the game. Chris Canty is a starter and an experienced leader but will be pushed by young defensive linemen Brent Urban, Carl Davis and Kapron Lewis-Moore. Defensive end Lawrence Guy is an underrated player who has a nose for the football. This

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

ACADEMIC STAR As a renowned mathematician and the winner of the William V. Campbell Trophy, also known as "the academic Heisman," Ravens guard John Urschel is growing accustomed to being celebrated for his brain. He became the subject of social media attention when comedian Conan O'Brien wrote on Twitter: "A Baltimore Raven published a complex study in a math journal. The NFL suspended him for unsportsmanlike conduct." Urschel, who replied to Conan's tweet with one of his own featuring a complex mathematical equation, typically spends his offseason days with five hours of training, lifting, running, football drills, kick boxing and mixed martial arts wrestling followed by five hours of math and an hour of playing chess. Urschel graduated from Penn State with a bachelor's degree in math in three years with a 4.0 grade point average, then got a master's in one year and taught vector calculus trigonometry to students while he was still enrolled.

AT THE MOVIES Outside linebacker Terrell Suggs is a full-fledged film mogul who owns a Maryland-based independent movie production company that has produced several movies that have been featured in film festivals everywhere from Miami to Cannes. Suggs is heavily involved in every aspect of the operations, including sitting in on casting auditions. Suggs constantly plays movies in his locker at the Ravens' training complex, typically the latest action films or comedies, at an extremely high volume. His locker stall has become a popular spot for teammates and reporters.

FUTURE AMBITION Offensive tackle Eugene Monroe founded a developmental real estate firm called 4th Down Partners and is one of a group of investors in a $250 million redevelopment planned between Federal Hill and M&T Bank Stadium in Sharp-Leadenhall in Baltimore. The business venture is an example of Monroe's habit of planning ahead, even though he's playing under a five-year, $37.5 million contract. "I've been around the league long enough to see players get to retirement and have no idea what they want to do, or think they have a plan but don't prepare for it while they're playing," Monroe says. "I am eager to get started now, within the time I have as a player.

HARVARD MAN Rugged fullback and former Ivy League standout Kyle Juszczyk purchased several tickets for friends for the Ravens' AFC Divisional round playoff game against the New England Patriots at Gillette Stadium. Juszczyk expressed confidence that he would be repaid promptly. Most of his well-heeled friends are fellow Harvard alums. "Most of them make more money than me," Juszczyk said. "They can afford to pay me back."

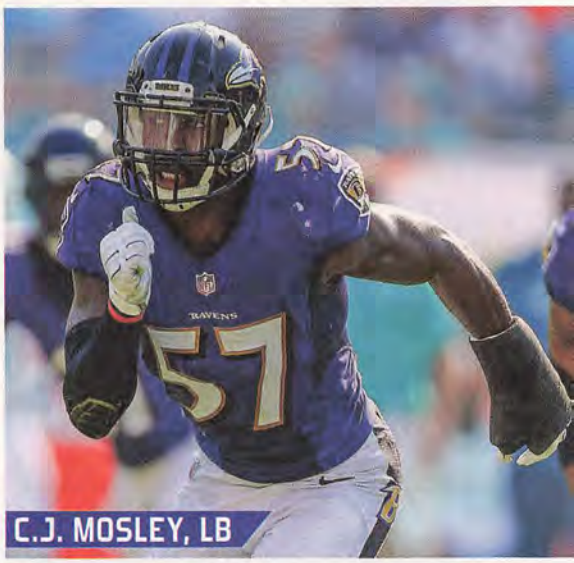
should be a strong rotation.

C.J. Mosley is one of the most instinctive young inside linebackers in the NFL. He has great recognition skills and the speed to chase down running backs in the open field. Middle linebacker Daryl Smith is up in years but rewarded the Ravens' faith in him last season when he piled up 128 tackles — five fewer than Mosley — and forced two fumbles. Outside linebacker Courtney Upshaw hasn't shown much more than being a brawny edge-setter; the team needs more pass-rush production out of him. Rookie rush linebacker Za'Darius Smith is the top candidate to replace McPhee as a situational pass rusher.



C.J. MOSLEY, LB

The secondary was decimated by injuries last season. Jimmy Smith was arguably playing at a Pro Bowl level before suffering a Lisfranc foot sprain that required surgery. The Ravens felt good enough about his recovery this offseason to invest a four-year, $48 million contract in him. Veteran corner Lardarius Webb restructured his contract and has made a sound return from a troublesome back injury that hampered him last year. The Ravens lack a proven nickel back and will audition Asa Jackson, Rashaan Melvin and rookie Tray Walker for that role.

Safety was one of the weakest positions on the team last season, but rangy new free safety Kendrick Lewis is expected to stabilize the position. Matt Elam has been a bust through two NFL seasons but will get another chance to redeem himself at strong safety, his natural position. Will Hill revived his career last year after off-field problems cost him his job with the New York Giants. Hill is slated to compete with Elam for a starting position.

SPECIALISTS The kicking game is headlined by Justin Tucker, a former Pro Bowl selection and the most accurate kicker in NFL history. Tucker has enough range that he's a constant scoring threat. The return game is in flux after the Ravens cut Jacoby Jones. Punter Sam Koch averaged 47 yards last season and has good hang time and directional punting skills. Long snapper Morgan Cox is good enough at his job that the Ravens keep signing him to new contracts, even after he tore an ACL for the second time in his career last year.

FINAL ANALYSIS Although the schedule is demanding, the Ravens remain playoff contenders — if a receiving corps in flux can get the job done and if the secondary can avoid the injuries that have prevented them from getting past Tom Brady in the postseason.

Breshad Perriman effectively replaces Torrey Smith as a deep threat, creating separation with his rare 4.22 speed. Maxx Williams has drawn comparisons to Jason Witten and should provide a long-term replacement for Dennis Pitta. Carl Davis has a great size-speed ratio and has a nasty streak. He should be properly motivated after expressing frustration that he didn't go in the first two rounds. Za'Darius Smith is an edge-setter with similar traits to Pernell McPhee and should fit into Ravens' scheme as a situational pass rusher. Javorius Allen is a one-cut downhill runner with excellent hands out of the backfield. Tray Walker is a bit developmental, but he has good press coverage skills, size and speed. Nick Boyle is a classic blocking tight end. Darren Waller is a huge red-zone target with vast physical skills but is a bit of a project.

SCOUTING THE RAVENS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP BALTIMORE "The Ravens let Torrey Smith walk as a free agent, but they got great mileage out of Steve Smith and drafted UCF wide receiver Breshad Perriman and tight end Maxx Williams in the first two rounds of the draft. ... The offensive line rebounded in 2015 and stabilized with Eugene Monroe and Ricky Wagner playing the tackle spots with Kelechi Osemele and Marshal Yanda being solid on the interior. ... It took a year, but the Baltimore defense returned to the top 10 statistically in 2015 after some growing pains the previous season without Ray Lewis and Ed Reed. ... With Haloti Ngata on the verge of being cut due to his high cap number, GM Ozzie Newsome was able to swing a trade with Detroit for two mid-round draft picks. ... He had that luxury because of the play of young defensive tackles Brandon Williams and Timmy Jernigan. ... C.J. Mosley was a gift at pick No. 17 in 2014 and emerged as an elite linebacker as a rookie. ... This will be a huge year for linebacker Arthur Brown and free safety Matt Elam, who have both been major disappointments in their early careers. ... Jimmy Smith finally put it all together in terms of his consistency and availability on the field, and they will cross their fingers that Lardarius Webb will stay healthy in 2015."

2 AFC NORTH FORECAST

Marvin Lewis is dubbing this season a "revival." There's been new construction at Paul Brown Stadium to upgrade the training facilities for the players as well as the game-day experience for fans. It's a visual metaphor for the team itself: While things have been good in Cincinnati the past few seasons, they haven't been good enough.

Four straight playoff berths have equaled four straight first-round defeats. Each loss has been similar in nature; the Bengals play well in the first half only to be dominated and eliminated in the second half. The offseason didn't bring major changes to the roster, but there have been subtle moves, such as bringing back defensive end Michael Johnson and adding former Green Bay linebacker A.J. Hawk for stability in the front seven.

Some things don't change, such as the need for quarterback Andy Dalton and wide receiver A.J. Green to step up in the biggest moments. When that revival takes place, then the Bengals can be thought of as a real contender.

OFFENSE Dalton enters his fifth season as the starter. He has shown he's capable of taking a team to the playoffs, but whether the Bengals have matched up against elite quarterbacks in the postseason (Philip Rivers, Andrew Luck) or the pedestrian sort (T.J. Yates, Matt Schaub), Dalton has been outperformed by the opposing signal caller. Offensive coordinator Hue Jackson took the ball out of Dalton's hands more than predecessor Jay Gruden last season, and there's reason to expect the focus of the offense again this season to be running the ball.

The backfield combination of Jeremy Hill and Giovani Bernard produced more than 1,800 yards and 14 touchdowns on the ground, as well as 70 receptions. They are the most reliable weapons in this offense, and Jackson doesn't care if defenses know they're coming. Put it this way: Jackson wouldn't have called for a pass on the goal line with the Super Bowl in the balance.

A return to health by numerous receivers should make Dalton more efficient and the passing game more productive. Green missed three games entirely plus significant portions of two others with toe and biceps injuries, then didn't play in the postseason because of a concussion. Wide receiver Marvin Jones missed the entire season with a broken foot. Tight end Tyler Eifert had three catches in the opening game before suffering a dislocated elbow that sidelined him for the rest of the season.

The offensive line returns intact, led by left tackle Andrew Whitworth. The Bengals used their first two draft picks on tackles Cedric Ogbuehi and Jake Fisher, but don't take that as a sign that the heart and soul of the Bengals is going anywhere anytime soon. Whitworth sets the tone on the field and in the locker room. He may be 33 and entering his 10th season, but he's still an elite left tackle. Left guard Clint Boling was re-signed to a five-year deal, while the Bengals picked up the option for 2016 on right guard Kevin Zeitler. Center Russell Bodine will be in his second season, while Andre Smith and Eric Winston will get competition from Fisher at right tackle.

DEFENSE This unit needs new life infused into it. A lot of that infusion needs to come from recent draft picks whose time has come to put up or shut up.

The Bengals are hopeful that the return of Johnson after an ill-fated season in Tampa Bay will help revitalize a defensive line that lost its moxie last season. The Bengals managed just 20 sacks. No player outside of Carlos Dunlap (eight) and Geno Atkins (three) had as many as two sacks. Bringing back Johnson will allow the Bengals to put Wallace Gilberry back into the specialist role in which he was so effective from 2012-13. Gilberry can play inside or on the end, but he played too much last season. The strength of the line in the past was in its rotation, but that rotation failed the Bengals last season. There's a question as to whether Geno Atkins will ever regain the All-Pro form he had prior to an ACL tear in 2013. He was just another guy last year, showing only flashes of the power and quickness that made offenses fear him.

Margus Hunt was a project when the Bengals drafted him out of SMU two years ago. The Estonia native had played football for just four years when the Bengals took him in the second round. The project phase of Hunt's development is over. It's time to put that 6'8", 290-pound body to good use. Hunt was plagued by an ankle injury last season, but he needs to be more than a body on the field. His size and athleticism make him a perfect complement in the rotation with Dunlap and Johnson.

The great unknown of the defense is linebacker Vontaze Burfict. He played in just five games

NEW ERA

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

THRILL HILL Running back Jeremy Hill led the NFL in rushing over the final nine weeks of last season with 929 yards. He had five 100-yard games, including four of 140 yards or more. The only other running backs to have at least four 140-yard games in their rookie seasons are Hall of Famers Eric Dickerson (five in 1983) and Curtis Martin (four in 1995).

DUBIOUS MARK Four straight playoff appearances are nothing to laugh at. Four straight first-round exits are nothing to get excited about. The Bengals are one of only four teams that have made the postseason each of the last four seasons, along with Denver, New England and Green Bay. Of course, each of those teams has at least won a conference title and played in a Super Bowl, with the Patriots and Packers each winning one as part of their current six-year playoff runs. The Bengals are the first team in NFL history to lose four consecutive opening-round playoff games.

TEAMMATES AGAIN A.J. Hawk grew up in Centerville, a suburb of Dayton about 40 miles north of Cincinnati. He played on the same teams as Bengals kicker Mike Nugent at the youth level, then at Centerville High School and again at Ohio State. Nugent was Hawk's quarterback for one year in high school, and they helped Ohio State win a national title in 2002. Nugent was signed to a two-year extension this offseason. "My wife has known his wife Emily since they were little kids, and I've known Nuge forever, too," says Hawk. "Nuge loves it here, and obviously he was re-signed. It's fun. I get to play high school, college and now in the league with Nuge. It's a great thing."

WELCOME BACK There are several familiar faces re-joining the Bengals after having left the franchise. Four of the six unrestricted free agents the Bengals signed from other teams had previously played for the organization: defensive end Michael Johnson, defensive tackle Pat Sims, cornerback Brandon Ghee and quarterback Josh Johnson. Michael Johnson was the most notable of the group, coming back after one season with Tampa Bay. He had signed a five-year, $43.75 million deal with the Buccaneers, but they cut him after one injury-hampered season in which he had 27 tackles and four sacks.

CAP & GOWN Michael Johnson finished up his degree work at Georgia Tech this offseason and walked across the stage during graduation ceremonies in May. The Bengals drafted him in the third round in 2009, and he went from being a third-down pass rusher to a vital every-down player for them before he left for Tampa Bay in free agency last year.

last season because of various injuries, including two concussions suffered in the first two games of the season. There aren't many players with his aggressiveness and instincts for diagnosing a play and making the tackle. That was missing from the defense throughout 2014. Burfict had microfracture knee surgery in the offseason, so just how good he can be this year remains to be seen. That's one reason Hawk was signed; the other is for his leadership. Much like James Harrison in 2013, Hawk is a player who's been there and done that. He's not at the top of his game anymore, but he can still provide a strong presence.

Dre Kirkpatrick and Darqueze Dennard were first-round picks in 2012 and 2014, respectively. They were stuck behind Leon Hall, Terence Newman and Adam Jones last year. That won't be the case this season. They'll be starting sooner than later. The Bengals are solid at safety with Reggie Nelson and George Iloka, a fourth-year player who is emerging as one of the better young safeties in the NFL.

JEREMY HILL, RB

SPECIALISTS The Bengals have a solid trio in kicker Mike Nugent, punter Kevin Huber and long snapper Clark Harris. Huber is finally getting some due for his ability to control field position with punts inside the 20. He has a career 4-to-1 ratio on punts inside the 20 vs. touchbacks. Nugent showed off his mental toughness by making 16 of his final 17 field-goal attempts, including a 57-yarder in the playoffs, after missing a 36-yarder in overtime against Carolina in October.

FINAL ANALYSIS The scenarios for the Bengals haven't changed much from a season ago. They have proven they are among the top six teams in the AFC. They are playoff-worthy. They have talent. Do they have the mental toughness to get over the hump? At some point you just have to make plays. Everyone has to deal with injuries. No team is always at its best. Sometimes you just have to find a way to win a game.

Six of Cincinnati's first seven picks were from non-skill positions as the Bengals looked to add some beef in and around the line of scrimmage. It was an odd move to take offensive tackles with the first two picks, but Jake Fisher was among their targets in the first round, so when he fell to them in the second round, it was an easy choice to make. Cedric Ogbuehi is coming off an ACL tear from last December's bowl game and may not be ready until the middle of this season, but the Bengals very well may have their bookend tackles of the future. Paul Dawson may end up as the most important member of this draft class as Vontaze Burfict is coming off knee surgery — besides the fact that Burfict suffered at least two concussions last season. Mario Alford's speed can play well on returns or at receiver.

SCOUTING THE BENGALS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP CINCINNATI "Marvin Lewis received a one-year contract extension through 2016, so that will lessen some but not all the pressure on the Bengals as they try to get a breakthrough win in the playoffs. Along with QB Andy Dalton, the focus is squarely on a team that has been a consistent winner during the regular season but a failure in the postseason. ... Cincinnati has a very solid group of offensive players with a true superstar in A.J. Green. ... They could definitely use another wide receiver right now but opted for two tackles in the early part of the draft, Texas A&M's Cedric Ogbuehi and Oregon's Jake Fisher, for future use. ... Tight end Tyler Eifert will have an expanded role in 2015 with the departure of Jermaine Gresham in free agency. ... Running back Jeremy Hill had a big rookie year, and with a healthy Giovani Bernard, they should be even more dynamic this season. ... Defensively, the Bengals were dead last in sacks with 20 for the entire campaign. End Michael Johnson inked a huge deal with Tampa Bay only to be released a year later and re-sign with the Bengals. They have to get more production from Wallace Gilberry and Margus Hunt in order to get their defensive line rotation back in order. ... The secondary is going through a transition with the emergence of cornerback Dre Kirkpatrick, who should take over a starting full-time role."

The Browns enter 2015 having changed offensive coordinators again, still searching for a real answer at quarterback and still trying to climb out of fourth place in the rugged AFC North. Though this year's team should have better overall talent and depth and should benefit from having coach Mike Pettine and several key veterans back, it's fair to wonder if there's enough offensive firepower to allow the Browns to compete with the league's best teams.

The defense has been upgraded, and with better tackling and better health among the front seven, there should be a noticeable improvement against the run. The secondary is an experienced and well-paid bunch, too, and has leaders and playmakers in Joe Haden, Donte Whitner, Tashaun Gipson and Tramon Williams.

The offensive line is the team's strongest and deepest unit, with Alex Mack set to return at center after an injury-shortened 2014 season and perennial Pro Bowler Joe Thomas back at left tackle. Thomas will tutor second-year guard Joel Bitonio and 2015 first-rounder Cameron Erving, who is Mack's likely eventual successor at center but could play right guard or right tackle. The Browns will try to establish the run and hope to throw off play-action from that.

They're still building for the future, too; a year after spending two first-round picks on early draft entries who brought maturity issues to the NFL, the Browns went with older, productive players, many of whom figure as 2015 contributors and 2016 starters.

OFFENSE Brian Hoyer was allowed to leave after starting 13 games at quarterback before giving way to Johnny Manziel, who was totally overwhelmed in two starts and spent 10 weeks of the offseason in a rehab center for undisclosed issues. Veteran journeyman Josh McCown was signed to start at quarterback, and veteran receivers Dwayne Bowe and Brian Hartline were added after the Browns learned their most talented receiver, Josh Gordon, was suspended for at least one year.

Tight end Jordan Cameron departed via free agency, and offensive coordinator Kyle Shanahan asked out, meaning 2015 marks a fresh start for almost everybody who will touch the ball. Running backs Terrance West and Isaiah Crowell showed promise as rookies, and both are strong, physical runners who figure to have a chance to improve as they get more comfortable with the NFL game. Slot receiver Andrew Hawkins is a playmaker whose opportunities to be productive figure to depend on the ability of Bowe and Hartline to get open down the field.

Manziel returned to the team in the spring, but the Browns' decision not to draft a quarterback affirmed the assumption that McCown will start 2015 and Manziel will be given a chance to learn how to be an NFL quarterback from the sideline. His task is to prove to the team that his admitted work-ethic issues from last season are in the past. McCown took a beating last year in Tampa Bay, but the Browns believe with a better offensive line and a run-first approach, he'll be more like the player who kept the Bears afloat in 2013 when Jay Cutler was injured.

Improvement will be judged by efficiency and on the scoreboard. The 2014 Browns had the league's worst completion percentage (54.6) and third-down success rate and were 27th in the NFL in scoring. The loss of Mack was huge to the offense's identity and ability to convert key short-yardage chances. But even with the line set to return intact — and possibly with more depth — the Browns still have to prove they have the skill players to turn routine plays into big gains and consistently score more than 20 points per game.

The one offensive certainty: Thomas will come to play. Amazingly, the Browns left tackle has not missed an offensive snap since he was drafted in 2007.

DEFENSE The Browns have been aggressive in consecutive offseasons in trying to add talent to every level of the defense and believe they've built a unit with the necessary talent and depth to be among the best in the AFC.

The defensive line was overvalued a year ago and suffered when injuries hit. But the linebacking corps got big seasons from Karlos Dansby and Paul Kruger, and the secondary added Williams to a group that could really make a leap if 2014 first-round pick Justin Gilbert can overcome the maturity issues that plagued him a year ago.

Gipson contended for the NFL interception lead, and though Whitner is 30, he's still active and disruptive. Haden has emerged as one of the league's top cornerbacks, and the Browns believe Gilbert has the talent to be a playmaker, too. Even with his issues last season he

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

IRONMAN Offensive tackle Joe Thomas has never missed a single snap in his eight-year career, starting and finishing every game at left tackle and going to the Pro Bowl at the end of every season. Alex Mack had the same streak of never missing a snap going at center before he broke his fibula in a game last October and was lost for the season.

HOME It's an Ohio homecoming for veteran receiver Brian Hartline, who played collegiately at Ohio State and played his GlenOak High School home games adjacent to the Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, about 50 miles south of Cleveland. The Browns added native Clevelander and Hartline's college teammate Donte Whitner via free agency in 2014.

MR. RELIABLE The Browns were willing to pay cornerback Tramon Williams $7 million this season even though he's 32 because he's been productive and durable. Williams has missed just one game in the last eight seasons and has played in 127 games over the last eight years. The only NFL player with more passes defensed over the last five years than Williams is his new Browns teammate, Joe Haden.

QUALITY COVERAGE Williams figures to start opposite Haden, replacing Buster Skrine in a secondary rotation that last season helped hold opposing quarterbacks to the league's lowest cumulative quarterback rating (74.1) and completion percentage (57.1) while ranking eighth in the NFL in passing yards allowed (224.5). Free safety Tashaun Gipson was leading the NFL in interceptions with six when he suffered a season-ending knee injury that didn't require surgery last November.

FOR KICKS Haden, who's been to back-to-back Pro Bowls, signed a big-money extension with the Browns last spring. He's become a fan favorite along the way, and the avid shoe collector opened a shoe store in downtown Cleveland last year.

BRIGHTER AND BETTER? The Browns unveiled a new logo featuring a brighter orange last spring and will also have new uniforms in 2015, with up to nine different jersey-pants color combinations involving white, brown and orange. The Browns haven't worn orange pants or jerseys since 2004.

THE LIST GROWS Josh McCown is in line to be the 23rd player to start a game at quarterback since the Browns returned to the NFL in 1999. Assuming he does, he'll join his brother, Luke, a 2004 Browns draft pick, on the list.

There's age across the defense — Dansby, Whitner, Kruger, Williams, defensive end Desmond Bryant and new defensive end Randy Starks all have plenty of experience — but there are some young legs, too, in Haden, linebacker Chris Kirksey and rookie nose tackle Danny Shelton. The Browns considered Shelton, the No. 12 overall pick in the draft, the best player to immediately shore up a run defense that ranked last in the NFL a season ago. The Browns drafted two defensive linemen in the first three rounds with Bryant nearing 30 and former first-round pick Phil Taylor entering the final year of his contract.

The Browns will ask a lot of this defense, but they believe that the group is up to the challenge if the run defense improves. Some help from the offense on the scoreboard and in time of possession would be welcomed, but there are pieces to work with here.

ISAIAH CROWELL

SPECIALISTS The Browns had to make a change at placekicker last season when Billy Cundiff struggled. Garrett Hartley was a December addition who faced no real pressure kicks, and it's surprising the Browns didn't draft a kicker to give him some competition this summer. Young punter Spencer Lanning established himself last season. The Browns would like Lanning to punt less, but they're comfortable with his work. The punt-return game was a disaster last season, and Travis Benjamin is probably down to his last chance with the Browns in this training camp. Among the other candidates to return kicks and punts are rookie running back Duke Johnson, Gilbert and speedy second-year receiver Taylor Gabriel.

FINAL ANALYSIS The Browns won seven games last year, the most by the franchise since 2007. But the offense went totally flat late in the year, there were too many off-field incidents, and the season ended with a five-game losing streak. The 2015 team should be equipped with better leaders, better chemistry and better depth, but it's still fair to wonder who's going to make big plays and if this team will score enough touchdowns to be a legitimate playoff contender.

The addition of Danny Shelton instead of a receiver is designed to shore up a run defense that ranked last in the NFL in 2014, and the addition of Cameron Erving adds depth this year at multiple positions and likely gives the Browns a center of the future. Duke Johnson, highly productive during his three years at Miami (Fla.), will compete for snaps and touches immediately. Nate Orchard should play on special teams and on passing downs, and seventh-rounder Ifo Ekpre-Olomu was a calculated gamble as he recovers from a torn ACL and should have a chance to contribute after a year of rehab and learning.

SCOUTING THE BROWNS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP CLEVELAND "The Browns have lost because offensively they cannot convert on third downs, and defensively they have not been able to stop the run. ... Dwayne Bowe was signed from Kansas City, and Andrew Hawkins is a quality third or fourth receiver, but neither will require special game-planning. ... Left tackle Joe Thomas has not missed a snap since he was drafted in 2007. Cleveland's run game went down after center Alex Mack suffered a season-ending leg injury, so they picked Florida State's Cameron Erving to play right guard or right tackle in preparation for another injury or Mack's contract expiring. ... Running backs Terrance West and Isaiah Crowell flashed ability, but the question remains if one or the other can be a major difference-maker, or can third-round pick Duke Johnson become a factor?. ... Outside linebacker Paul Kruger bounced back from a subpar 2013 with 11 sacks, but Jabaal Sheard left for New England. ... Barkevious Mingo has been marginal, so they selected Utah's Nate Orchard in the second round. ... Karlos Dansby was adequate in the middle, and Donte Whitner provided some leadership in the back end with corner Joe Haden continuing to perform at a high level. ... Buster Skrine departed for the Jets, and Justin Gilbert's rookie season was one to forget, so corner is still a concern."

Building on an 11–5 season and an AFC North title won't be easy for the Pittsburgh Steelers. The offense is loaded and returns every starter from a unit that averaged 411.1 yards per game last season, second best in the NFL. But the defense is a serious work in progress after the Steelers managed just 33 sacks last season, their lowest total since 1989, and allowed 4.4 yards per carry.

The schedule doesn't do the team any favors, and by at least one measure it is the most difficult in the NFL. The Steelers' opponents combined for a .578 winning percentage last season, the highest in the league. What's more, the Steelers have to visit Seattle, San Diego, Kansas City and St. Louis after playing no games west of the Mississippi River in 2014. The Steelers parlayed a favorable schedule last season and a breakout campaign by the offense into their first division title since 2010. It will be much tougher for them to repeat as division champions, especially in the rugged AFC North.

OFFENSE Mike Tomlin has hardly tempered expectations for the unit that carried the Steelers last season. The ninth-year coach said at the NFL owners meetings in late March that the Steelers could have the best offense in the NFL this season because they "have the goods." He won't get any arguments in Pittsburgh or beyond the Steel City. The Steelers have arguably the best quarterback-running back-wide receiver trio in the NFL in Ben Roethlisberger, Le'Veon Bell and Antonio Brown. Roethlisberger threw for 4,952 yards last season and became the first player on franchise history to win a passing title (he shared the honor with Drew Brees). Roethlisberger, who turned 33 in March, is seemingly getting better with age. And the Steelers backed up general manager Kevin Colbert's assertion that Roethlisberger's best playing days are still ahead of him by signing Big Ben to a five-year contract extension that could be worth as much as $108 million.

Roethlisberger has reigned in the sandlot style that defined him earlier in his career in large part because the players around him are better. Brown led the NFL in catches (129) and receiving yards (1,698) last season and plays bigger than his listed size of 5'10", 186 pounds because of his ability to separate and make contested catches in traffic. If Brown's production dips this season, it could be because the Steelers have an emerging star in second-year wideout Martavis Bryant as well as Markus Wheaton, who made a significant leap in his second season after playing sparingly as a rookie.

As good as Roethlisberger and Brown were last season, Bell won the Steelers' MVP Award — as voted on by the players — and for good reason. The second-year man rushed for 1,361 yards and led all NFL running backs with 854 receiving yards. There is not a better all-around back than Bell, who also excels at picking up blitzing linebackers. The Steelers have to hope that DeAngelo Williams can do a credible job of filling in for Bell, who is out at the start of the season because of an NFL suspension.

The offensive line returns intact and is still young but also experienced. Maurkice Pouncey re-established himself as one of the top centers in the NFL last season after coming back from a major knee injury. Right guard David DeCastro is the Steelers' best pulling guard since perennial Pro Bowler Alan Faneca.

DEFENSE It wasn't that long ago that questions about whether the Steelers' defense had gotten too old were as much an autumn ritual in Western Pennsylvania as the leaves changing colors. Not anymore. The average age of the Steelers' projected starters on defense is 26.5. That number dips if rookie Bud Dupree, the team's first-round pick, beats out Arthur Moats at left outside linebacker.

The Steelers have a new defensive coordinator with former linebackers coach Keith Butler taking over for Dick LeBeau. Butler won't stray from the LeBeau's core philosophy of shutting down the run first and foremost or the Steelers' base 3-4 defense. He will try to simplify the defense to accommodate the youth he has inherited, and Butler has said that the Steelers have to become more opportunistic. They forced more than two turnovers in a game just twice last season, and they have 41 takeaways in their last two seasons. To put that into perspective, consider that the Steelers had 35 takeaways in 2010 alone, the last time they made the Super Bowl.

The linebackers playing to their pedigree could go a long way toward the Steelers fielding the kind of defense that can complement the offense. They should, at some point, have former first-round picks starting at all four linebacker spots. Two of those players in particular

A SHORT ABSENCE Coach Mike Tomlin says Antonio Brown probably has "OCD," and he means it as a compliment given the All-Pro wide receiver's maniacal work ethic. That trait may have played a part in Brown showing up for the voluntary offseason program after skipping the first week of it in late April. Brown has told the Steelers he wants a new contract. But the three-time Pro Bowler did not stay away from the team's practice facility for long.

HEADED FOR A STANDOFF? Brown still has three years left on the five-year, $42.5 million extension he signed in 2012. The Steelers aren't likely to budge from their policy of signing non-quarterbacks to a new deal only when those players are going into the final year of their contract. Another big season by Brown could compel them to make an exception — or lead to a contract impasse in 2016.

SNAP COUNT FOR HARRISON Joey Porter raised some eyebrows when the Steelers outside linebackers coach said the team planned to limit James Harrison to around 25 snaps per game this season. Porter's proclamation is more than just a nod to Harrison turning 37 in May. The Steelers want to give 2013 first-round pick Jarvis Jones every opportunity to develop at right outside linebacker.

STANDING PAT The Steelers gave former undrafted rookie Josh Harris a vote of confidence when they did not draft at least one running back for the first time since 2007. The Steelers' recent draft history and a suspension that Le'Veon Bell will serve at the start of the season strongly suggested that the Steelers would add to their stable of running backs. Harris, who was signed from the practice squad last November following the release of LeGarrette Blount, will challenge veteran DeAngelo Williams for carries while Bell is out.

PANNING OUT The Steelers went local when they got younger at tight end. Fifth-round draft pick Jesse James starred at South Allegheny High School, just outside of Pittsburgh, before playing three seasons at Penn State. James will have to buck recent history as he tries to establish himself as starting tight end Heath Miller's future successor. Just one Steelers' fifth-round pick since Tomlin became the head coach has developed into an eventual starter, and that was cornerback William Gay in 2007.

DAYS TO REMEMBER Wide receiver Sammie Coates was one of the big winners of the 2015 NFL draft. A day after the Steelers drafted the Auburn speedster in the third round, Coates' girlfriend accepted his wedding proposal. Coates should have a chance to contribute early with the Steelers, and his draft slot augers well for his future. Hines Ward, Mike Wallace, Emmanuel Sanders and Markus Wheaton are four of the last five wide receivers the Steelers have previously drafted in the third round. Of that group, only Wheaton has failed to make at least one Pro Bowl.

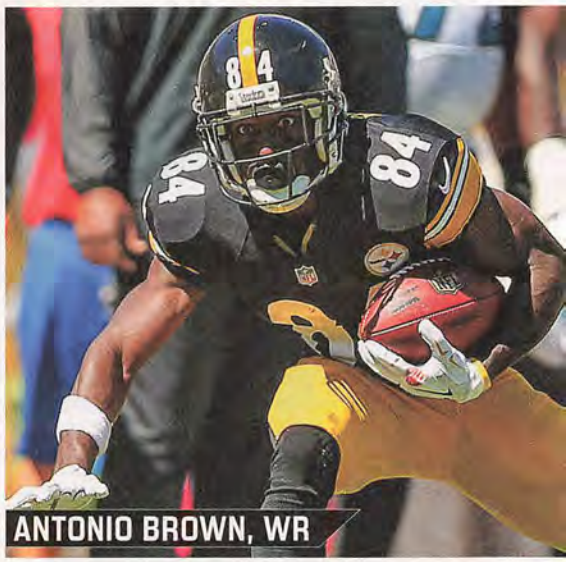
are key. Right outside linebacker Jarvis Jones has to make a big jump in his third season after missing most of 2014 because of a dislocated wrist. Ryan Shazier may be the most likely candidate to break out after a high-ankle sprain and normal rookie growing pains limited the 15th overall pick of the 2014 draft last season. Shazier's speed and ability to play in space make him more valuable than ever with the Steelers playing their nickel defense more than 50 percent of the time. He is a playmaker, and the competition at inside linebacker, the Steelers' deepest position, should only bring out the best in Shazier.

The secondary has gotten younger, and third-year man Shamarko Thomas gets the first crack at replacing the iconic Troy Polamalu at strong safety. Defensive backs coach Carnell Lake has said that the Steelers' two safety positions are interchangeable, but does the team have a player who can cover ample ground on the back end of their defense? Thomas and starting free safety Mike Mitchell are big hitters who support the run. There are questions about how well both can cover.



ANTONIO BROWN, WR

SPECIALISTS Shaun Suisham occasionally stubs his toe on field goals he should make but is otherwise as reliable as they come. Punter Brad Wing has to become more consistent in his second season, and the former LSU All-American will be challenged after having training camp all to himself last season. The Steelers have to get more out of kickoff returns after averaging only 21.7 yards per return last season. They drafted Dri Archer in the third round in 2014 to give them a jolt in the return game. He fared so poorly that he lost his job as the team's primary kickoff returner before the midway point of the season. Archer, the fastest player on the team, has to emerge this season or he is in danger of becoming a bust.

FINAL ANALYSIS The offense may have to carry the Steelers until a defense in transition comes together. The offense should be a tour de force if it stays relatively healthy, though the Steelers have to start faster. They managed just 19 points on 16 opening drives last season, and scoring first could help take some pressure off the defense.

Few people expected the Steelers to win 11 games last season, and it will be hard to duplicate that number in 2015. Ten victories could be enough to repeat as AFC North champions if the Steelers win at least four division games.

The Steelers predictably focused on defense given their myriad needs on that side of the ball. Need and best player available made a blissful convergence when Bud Dupree was still available after the first 21 picks of the draft. He is a physical specimen who crushed it at the NFL Combine. Dupree has experience dropping into coverage but needs to refine his pass-rushing skills. Who better for him to learn from than outside linebackers coach Joey Porter and veteran James Harrison? Senquez Golson and Doran Grant don't have ideal size for cornerbacks, but both have excellent ball skills, which the Steelers coveted. They combined for 15 interceptions last season — only one more than Gerod Holliman, who won the Jim Thorpe Award last season as the best defensive back in college football. Sammie Coates might have been a bit of a reach in the third round, but he could yield high rewards.

SCOUTING THE STEELERS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP PITTSBURGH "There is good news and bad news in the Steel City. The offense clicked to the tune of 411.1 yards per game, but the defense has aged and is under construction with a coordinator not named Dick LeBeau. ... Big Ben will be expected to carry the team while the defense is reconfigured. This team can have a winning record and even make the playoffs, but they are not good enough to make a deep run. ... Antonio Brown might spend the offseason squawking about his current deal that has three years left, but he has become one of the most exciting players in the entire league. ... Tight end Heath Miller has been underappreciated his entire career and has now accumulated over 500 catches. ... The offensive line held up last year because Pittsburgh actually ran the ball some in 2014. ... Running back Le'Veon Bell had a breakout campaign. He is a superstar in the making, but he will miss the 2015 opener after he and LeGarrette Blount were cited for marijuana last summer. ... Defensively, Pittsburgh finished 18th in total yards allowed and scoring defense mainly because of their struggles to pressure the QB and create turnovers. ... The secondary will be completely remade in 2015 with Troy Polamalu and Ike Taylor both retiring. Major help is needed at corner and safety."

Coach Bill O'Brien knows he can't expect the kind of improvement the Texans made in his first season, but it doesn't mean they can't challenge Indianapolis for the AFC South title and compete for a wild-card berth. Despite playing four quarterbacks and starting three, the Texans improved by an NFL-best seven victories to 9–7 and missed the playoffs on the last Sunday of the season. They added 13 veteran free agents and seven draft choices in an effort to increase firepower on both sides of the ball. They let go of the best player in franchise history, receiver Andre Johnson, and it better not backfire. They could have as many as eight new starters, including five on a defense that improved dramatically during a 4–1 finish that teased a football-crazed city that hasn't had a team advance as far as the AFC Championship Game since the Oilers after the 1979 season.

OFFENSE If the Texans won nine games with three different starting quarterbacks, imagine what they're capable of accomplishing if they develop stability at the most important position.

Ryan Fitzpatrick (Jets) and Case Keenum (Rams) were traded, and they took eight of the nine victories with them. In the first two starts of his career, Ryan Mallett was 1–1 but underwent season-ending surgery on a torn pectoral muscle. His competition is Brian Hoyer, a journeyman who went 7–6 as a starter in Cleveland last season. Like Mallett, Hoyer played for O'Brien and offensive coordinator George Godsey in New England. Hoyer, the most mobile of the group, has just 17 games of starting experience, but that's 15 more than Mallett. Last year's fourth-round pick, cannon-armed Tom Savage, is still watching and learning.

Whoever wins the job will miss Johnson, who was released and signed with AFC South rival Indianapolis after 12 exceptional seasons in Houston. DeAndre Hopkins emerged as a bona fide No. 1 go-to guy in 2014 with terrific ball skills and excellent hands. Opposite Hopkins, the Texans might take a receiver-by-committee approach. They have more candidates than the Republican party in third-round pick Jaelen Strong, veteran free agents Cecil Shorts and Nate Washington and holdovers Keshawn Martin and Damaris Johnson.

The coaches also need more production from the tight ends. Starter Garrett Graham and backups C.J. Fiedorowicz and Ryan Griffin combined for 32 catches. All have their strengths and weaknesses. Solving the quarterback issue might help the tight ends' productivity.

O'Brien and Godsey like to run the ball as much as possible. Arian Foster, who battled a hamstring injury, and rookie Alfred Blue combined for almost 1,800 yards rushing and scored 16 touchdowns. The coaches need to do a better job of managing Foster's touches. They used him as a receiver a lot, including in the slot, because he has such superb hands; but that exposed him to more punishment. Blue, a between-the-tackles runner entering his second season, should be able to take some of that load off Foster.

New offensive line coach Mike Devlin earned an impressive reputation with the Jets as someone who makes his players more physical and technically sound. As a group, the line played well, but individually, only right guard Brandon Brooks could pound his chest. He's a mauler with nifty feet, and he's improved every season. With long-time center Chris Myers having been released, Ben Jones moves from left guard. Xavier Su'a-Filo, last year's second-round pick, should replace Jones. They need to develop depth they can count on, especially in the interior of the line.

DEFENSE Did the defense finally figure out coordinator Romeo Crennel's complicated system down the stretch, or was the impressive performance on that side of the ball an aberration? During their 4–1 stretch drive, they ranked fourth in points allowed, second in total defense and first in third-down conversions. Overall, the Texans set a franchise record by forcing an NFL-high 34 turnovers one season after they recorded 11, the fewest since the merger in 1970. Can the defense keep up that pace, especially if it has four or five new starters?

The most famous new face belongs to mammoth nose tackle Vince Wilfork, coming off another Super Bowl victory with New England. He plans to settle in next to J.J. Watt. Wilfork is supposed to tie up two blockers and stuff the run before turning over the pass rush to younger players such as Watt, the two-time Defensive Player of the Year.

Crennel used Watt in inventive ways — moving him up and down the line — but he needs help from the infirmary. Outside linebacker Jadeveon Clowney, who missed much of his rookie season with a knee injury, is coming along nicely from microfracture surgery, but he's got a long way to go to be ready for the opener against Kansas City. When he gets back on the WILFORK IS SMOKIN' Nose tackle Vince Wilfork loves to barbeque. After he signed a two-year, $9 million contract with the Texans, a Houston company that makes barbecue pits presented him with a new custom-made grill as large as a compact automobile. Wilfork's new pit would be ideal for tailgating at NRG Stadium on Sundays, but he'll be busy.

ROAD TO RECOVERY Guard David Quessenberry, who missed last season while undergoing treatment for lymphoma, is an inspiring story. His cancer is in remission, and he's competing for a place on the team entering his third season. His hair has grown back. His weight is back up to 306. Depth in the line is an issue. "I used to think lifting weights was a pain in the butt, but now I love every single minute of it — it's awesome," Quessenberry says.

MEGA-WATT Last season, J.J. Watt became the first defensive lineman or linebacker to score five touchdowns in a season since 1948. Watt, the first unanimous NFL Defensive Player of the Year, had three catches and two returns for touchdowns.

FAMILY REUNION New quarterback Brian Hoyer has been reunited with quarterback Ryan Mallett, coach Bill O'Brien and offensive coordinator George Godsey. They know each other well, because they all were part of the 2011 New England Patriots team that lost its second Super Bowl to the Giants. Hoyer was in his third season behind Tom Brady. Mallett was a rookie third-round pick. O'Brien was the offensive coordinator. Godsey was an offensive assistant who worked with the quarterbacks.

PIANO MAN Running back Jonathan Grimes, a music major at William & Mary, is a terrific piano player who also sings, writes and records. He began taking piano lessons when he turned 7.

FIGHTING HUNGER Growing up in South Carolina, receiver DeAndre Hopkins says his family seldom had enough food on the table, so he's doing his best to make sure others don't suffer the way he did. Entering his third season, Hopkins is a spokesman for two organizations that fight hunger: the Houston Food Bank and Souper Bowl of Caring.

WHEREFORE ART THOU? Defensive coordinator Romeo Crennel has a sister named Juliet. Crennel, an avid photographer, collects Muhammad Ali memorabilia. Crennel's nickname is "Rac" because of his initials — Romeo A. Crennel, although the "A" doesn't stand for anything.

field, no one has a clue about how effective he can be or if he can stay healthy.

Inside linebacker Brian Cushing played most of last season, but he wasn't the same three-down player he was before he underwent two knee surgeries. The coaches are hoping he's regained his speed and agility.

It would elevate the defensive performance if outside linebacker Whitney Mercilus improved on last season's career-low five sacks. He's a weak-side rusher who must be more productive. He's moving to the other side to take on tight ends. He sets the edge well and can drop into coverage, but he has to be more physical at the point of attack.

There's been a revolving door at safety but not at cornerback, where Johnathan Joseph and Kareem Jackson are together for a fifth consecutive season. They play hard against the run, cover well and are seasoned veterans. Kevin Johnson, the first-round pick, should be the nickel corner.

ARIAN FOSTER, RB

One of the biggest free-agent acquisitions was free safety Rahim Moore. The coaches wanted more of a centerfielder, and Moore had four interceptions for Denver last season. He's got range and brains and needs to become the captain of the secondary in place of Kendrick Lewis, who bolted for Baltimore after Moore was signed.

SPECIALISTS There was nothing special about the Texans' special teams last season, though kicker Randy Bullock (30-of-35 field goals, 130 points) and punter Shane Lechler (46.3-yard gross, 38.7 net) aren't the problem. O'Brien is threatening to use starters if coverage and returns don't improve. In a reserve role at Philadelphia, Chris Polk returned only 11 kickoffs but averaged 30.9 yards, including a 102-yard touchdown. Ideally, he makes the roster in the backfield and becomes a weapon on kickoff returns. If not, receivers Damaris Johnson and Martin can compete for the return job. Neither deserves it. The only thing the Texans can count on is long snapper Jon Weeks, who does an outstanding job.

FINAL ANALYSIS Missing the playoffs on the last day of the season means fans and media — as well as owner Bob McNair — are expecting the Texans to make the playoffs. It's a reasonable expectation, but it won't be realistic if they suffer injuries where they lack quality depth. This is a well-coached team with a lot of talent and a favorable schedule that has a good chance to improve on last season's nine victories.

TEXANS IN THE DRAFT

7.	Kenny Hilliard	RB	6-0	226	LSU

There's no pressure on the rookies to start, even though Kevin Johnson, Benardrick McKinney and Jaelen Strong are expected to make solid contributions. Johnson should be the first corner off the bench and play outside, where his man-coverage skills make him a natural fit. Once he learns the system, McKinney might be able to beat out Akeem Dent. McKinney is being developed to play on first and second down until he learns to drop into coverage. The Texans traded up to get Strong in the third round, and they'll be disappointed if he isn't the first receiver off the bench. He had two remarkably productive years at Arizona State, catching 157 passes for 2,287 yards and 17 touchdowns. Christian Covington, who missed most of his junior year at Rice with a knee injury but declared early for the NFL Draft anyway, will be used in passing situations. Kenny Hilliard is a rugged back who carried the ball only 302 times in four seasons at LSU.

SCOUTING THE TEXANS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP HOUSTON "In his first season, Bill O'Brien managed a difficult QB situation and rode the Texans' opportunistic defense to nine wins. ... Maybe the greatest Texan in club history, Andre Johnson departed in free agency. DeAndre Hopkins took over as the No. 1 receiver last fall, and he will get support from newly acquired Cecil Shorts. ... Arian Foster's injury history is always a concern, but Alfred Blue showed the ability to be a competent stand-in if something happens long-term. ... The offensive line did enough to help Houston rank fifth in rushing and tied for fourth in fewest sacks allowed. Tackle Duane Brown has proven himself to be a quality NFL player. ... J.J. Watt is truly a special player and arguably the top player in the league. ... Jadeveon Clowney had microfracture surgery, so his effectiveness and long-term impact will be questioned until he can get on the field and prove himself. They got nothing from him last year. That's tough. ... The Texans signed Vince Wilfork to be part of their rotation and train last year's third-round pick Louis Nix. ... Linebacker Brian Cushing continues to play at a high level, but Whitney Mercilus has been just OK in his first three years. ... Corner Kareem Jackson was re-signed before he hit the market, and Johnathan Joseph has been a solid addition for GM Rick Smith."

Indianapolis Colts owner Jim Irsay emerged from a demoralized locker room at Gillette Stadium after a 45–7 AFC Championship Game loss to the New England Patriots and tried to offer reassurance.

"We're close," he said, despite evidence to the contrary. Heads shook in disbelief. Close to what?

It's not just last January that sticks in the scarred psyches of this franchise and fans. It's the previous January at Foxborough, Mass., as well, when the Colts were run over 43–22 by the Patriots in an AFC Divisional playoff rout.

The Colts have won 11 regular-season games in three consecutive years, and they've advanced one round farther in each of the past two postseasons. But they've been unable to survive the Patriots games. The defending Super Bowl champions visit Indianapolis again in 2015. If the Colts are going to take that next step, they must dethrone the champs, not just on Oct. 18 but in January.

OFFENSE Quarterback Andrew Luck is coming off his best Pro Bowl season yet after leading the NFL with 40 touchdown passes. He's got what is probably the best supporting cast in his four seasons with the additions of running back Frank Gore and wide receiver Andre Johnson and the first-round draft selection of wide receiver Phillip Dorsett to go with Pro Bowl wide receiver T.Y. Hilton and the tight end tandem of Dwayne Allen and Coby Fleener.

Luck spoke at the outset of offseason training activities about improving red-zone efficiency and cutting down on turnovers. He had 22 of the team's 31 giveaways, almost double his number from the previous season. The Colts ranked 12th in touchdowns scored when driving inside the opponent's 20-yard line. While 42-year-old kicker Adam Vinatieri is still a reliable three-point option, the NFL's No. 6 scoring offense — at 28.6 points per game — could have put up more.

This next offense could be one of the league's best, presuming Luck (100 sacks taken in three seasons) has time to spread the ball around to a receiving corps that improved despite 14-year star Reggie Wayne not being re-signed. Hilton and Dorsett are speed burners. Johnson, the Houston Texans' all-time receiving leader, is determined to prove he has something left. The 33-year-old target provides size and experience. Gore, 32, is also motivated to show there's still life left in his legs. Johnson and Gore came to Indianapolis because they thought the Colts gave them the best shot at an elusive Super Bowl ring. And they link that objective to Luck.

DEFENSE Four losses to the Patriots during the three-year era of general manager Ryan Grigson and head coach Chuck Pagano have been by an average of 29 points. New England has scored 189 points, 47.3 per game, in those blowouts. So while the Colts own the AFC South Division and have progressed to near the top of the league in status, they have to figure out a way to stop or least reduce points scored by the Patriots.

Outside linebacker Trent Cole arrived via free agency from Philadelphia and should team with franchise all-time sack leader Robert Mathis to form one of the best league's best pass-rush tandems. That is, if Mathis can get healthy. He missed all of last season due to a four-game suspension and Achilles tendon tear. The Colts' 3-4 pass rush could still be formidable if Mathis needs time to find his stride. Outside linebacker Jonathan Newsome led the team with 6.5 sacks as a rookie, and outside linebacker Erik Walden had six.

But the problem in playoffs past started with run defense. The Patriots ran for 177 yards and three scores last time, after 234 yards and six rushing TDs the year before. Defensive end Kendall Langford comes over from St. Louis and should be a solid run stuffer. Defensive tackle Arthur Jones needs to stay healthy — he started just three of nine games due to an ankle injury. The Colts traded up in the fifth round to draft Stanford nose tackle David Parry, evidence that the team isn't sold on Josh Chapman and/or Montori Hughes as the only run-plugging answer. Stanford defensive end Henry Anderson was drafted in the third round and was considered by many to be a steal, given his high-motor ability to get consistent backfield penetration in college.

Inside linebacker Nate Irving was signed away from Denver to provide a stronger run-stopping option inside. While D'Qwell Jackson and Jerrell Freeman are tackling machines, Freeman is better suited for pass defense, blitzing and using his speed to run down ball carriers. The cornerback trio of Vontae Davis, Greg Toler and nickel back Darius Butler returns, but safety is a concern. Mike Adams, 34, made his first Pro Bowl last season. Dwight Lowery comes over from Atlanta, and hard-hitting Clayton Geathers was drafted in the fourth round.

NEW ERA

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

DATING HIMSELF Andrew Luck was excited when the Colts signed wide receiver Andre Johnson. The quarterback grew up in Houston admiring the Texans' star. "I said, 'Wow, Andre, sweet,'" Luck says. "I was in middle school when he was drafted by the Texans."

COFFEE ON ME Mike Adams, a 34-year-old safety, was asked about mentoring young players in the secondary. "First of all, I'm going to have some Krispy Kreme donuts," he said. "Second, coffee, for anybody that wants any, let me know. I'm taking orders."

STANFORD & THE 'U' The Colts like guys from Stanford and the University of Miami. The drafting of Cardinal defensive end Henry Anderson and nose tackle David Parry reunites them with Stanford teammates in Luck, tight end Coby Fleener and wide receiver Griff Whalen. Andre Johnson and Frank Gore are from the "U," as is rookie wide receiver Phillip Dorsett and first-year tight end Erik Swoope.

MISSING REGGIE The team's decision to not re-sign 14-year star wide receiver Reggie Wayne disappointed the fan base, but "Reg" handled it with class. He took out a full-page advertisement in The Indianapolis Star to thank fans for their support and wouldn't say anything negative about the Colts. Wayne is the franchise leader in regular-season games played (211) and wins (143). He would like to play another season or two elsewhere.

MOVE-IN DAD Luck offered an amusing observation about his father, Oliver, staying with him when his parents visited for Mother's Day. "I'm trying to figure out a way to kick him out so we'll see how that works," Luck said, laughing. "It's hard to tell your old man that he has to leave your condo."

HALL OF FAME SON Wide receiver Duron Carter, son of NFL Hall of Famer Cris Carter, joined the Colts from the Canadian Football League. He says the group of receivers is the best he's ever been around, which begs the question: Where will he fit into the mix? "Get in where I fit in," he says. He suggests that Luck, who threw an NFL-best and career-high 40 TD passes last season, could have as many as 50 next season.

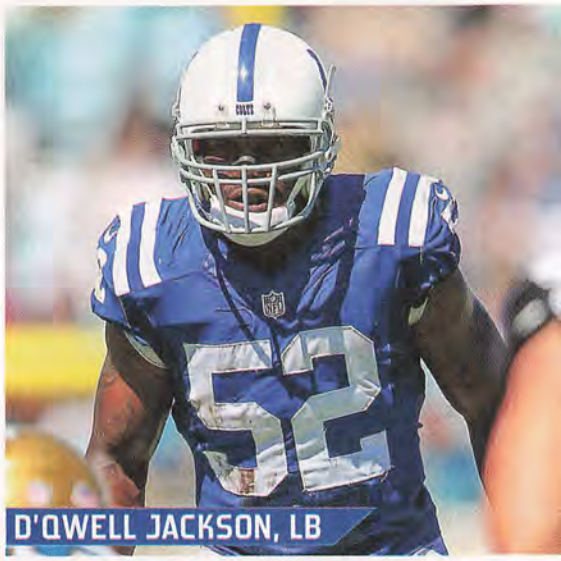
So the defense still has questions entering training camp.

SPECIALISTS Vinatieri, punter/kickoff specialist/holder Pat McAfee and long snapper Matt Overton might be the league's best triumvirate. Vinatieri made 30-of-31 field goals. He didn't miss until the season finale. McAfee boomed an NFL-best 70 touchbacks (on kickoffs) and was third in net punting average at 42.8 yards. Overton is almost always on the mark with his snaps. Dorsett is expected to get a crack at returning. The Colts were tied for second in kickoff returns but 26th in punt returns. Josh Cribbs was released a day after Dorsett was drafted. Dorsett impressed the Colts with his Hilton-like speed — he ran a 4.33 40-yard dash at the NFL Scouting Combine, then 4.27 and 4.29 at his pro day.



D'QWELL JACKSON, LB

FINAL ANALYSIS If Irsay is to be proven prophetic and the Colts have enough to exorcise Patriots demons, a lot has to go their way. Home-field advantage throughout the playoffs would be a start. Good health, including Mathis and along the offensive line, would be key. It's possible but unlikely that everything will go according to plan. It almost never does.

The offense should be undeniably potent. There's just too much talent, and Luck is a star on the rise. The Colts will pile up points. The question is defense. It must be more like the team that stopped Peyton Manning and Denver on the road in the playoffs to have any chance against the Patriots. Granted, Manning was playing on one leg due to an injury, but the Colts didn't allow a touchdown after the first quarter. That game has Irsay believing his team is close.

Irsay spoke after the draft about how he expected the Colts to win at least two Super Bowls during the Luck era. The 55-year-old owner is haunted by the regret of a Manning era that produced only one Super Bowl win. Irsay has said that the Colts should have won more with their previous franchise quarterback. Irsay's expectation is to win back-to-back titles at some point. He considers such an accomplishment a testament to greatness. The next round of Patriots games awaits. Maybe the Colts have what it takes, finally, to be great. That's a big maybe.

COLTS IN THE DRAFT

6.	Amarlo Herrera	ILB	6-1	244	Georgia
7.	Denzelle Good	OT	6-5	339	Mars Hill

Phillip Dorsett was a somewhat surprising selection, with receivers T.Y. Hilton, Andre Johnson, Donte Moncrief and Duron Carter already on the roster. Dorsett's speed (4.27 40 at Miami's pro day) was enticing enough for the Colts to reject a trade offer and stick with the pick. The Colts traded out of the second round but still got who they wanted in D'Joun Smith. The deal enabled them to move up 19 spots to take Clayton Geathers, who is raw but should get his chance to play some at safety. Analysts liked the Henry Anderson selection, suggesting he might actually be the best player in this class. The team traded up to grab David Parry out of Stanford. Josh Robinson is reunited with running back Vick Ballard, who was his Mississippi State mentor in 2011. Amarlo Herrera and Denzelle Good look like developmental players who could end up on the practice squad.

SCOUTING THE COLTS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP INDIANAPOLIS "You get the sense that everyone here feels the pressure of advancing one more step to the Super Bowl, and anything short of that goal will result in major coaching staff changes. ... With that said, they used Chuck Pagano's University of Miami background to sell Frank Gore and Andre Johnson on the idea that this is a team ready to win a ring. Gore continues to defy the odds at his age, while Johnson should have enough left to take some of the pressure off T.Y. Hilton, one of the most exciting and productive players in the NFL. ... Watch out for wide receiver Donte Moncrief, the third-rounder from Ole Miss in 2014 who flashed as a rookie. ... And yet, they had a curious first-round selection in Miami speedster Phillip Dorsett. ... The tight end group is very solid with Dwayne Allen, Coby Fleener and Jack Doyle. ... The offensive line is adequate at best with no dominant player in the starting five. ... The central figure for the entire organization is Andrew Luck. He is a transcendent talent that makes every responsibility of being a QB look easy, on and off the field. ... Every level of the defense could use a boost. ... The corners are better than average with a pass rush and when healthy. The trade for Vontae Davis has worked out well, and people inside the building really like Greg Toler."

Having watched the Jaguars win seven games during the first two years of the Dave Caldwell-Gus Bradley Era, owner Shad Khan wouldn't have been faulted this offseason if he had publicly mandated a specific number of wins for 2015. A regime's third season is usually prove-it-or-else time. But he has bypassed that request at every turn.

Still, Khan clearly expects more. More wins. More close games. More touchdowns. More takeaways. And he made his thoughts known when addressing fans in mid-February: "We owe (fans) better results on game day. I know that. Dave knows that. Gus knows that."

Knowing that, Caldwell (the general manager) and Bradley (the coach) went to work. They shook up the coaching staff. They signed a slew of free agents, six of whom are expected to start. And they added an eight-player draft class that will feature at least two opening-day starters.

OFFENSE The Jaguars reacted accordingly to a 3–13 season in which they didn't score much (league-low 15.6 points per game), couldn't run it (a misleading 21st), and didn't protect the passer (league-high 71 sacks allowed).

In are offensive coordinator Greg Olson, offensive line coach Doug Marrone, tight end Julius Thomas, right tackle Jermey Parnell, center Stefen Wisniewski, running back T.J. Yeldon, slot receiver Rashad Greene and, potentially, left guard A.J. Cann. All of the changes are geared toward giving quarterback Blake Bortles every chance to be successful. In 14 games last year, Bortles showed an ability to extend plays (by sliding around the pocket) and equal parts athleticism/smarts by rushing for 419 yards without taking any major hits. The guy is a playmaker. The Jaguars need him to be a difference-maker.

The Jaguars hope that the newcomers, combined with the development of players such as left tackle Luke Joeckel and the second-year receiving trio of Allen Robinson, Marqise Lee and Allen Hurns, can help Bortles produce an offensive revival. Joeckel has spent the offseason adding lower- and upper-body strength so he can more effectively smash opponents in the run game and hold up against them in the passing game. Houston has J.J. Watt, Tennessee has Brian Orakpo and Indianapolis has Trent Cole. Joeckel must be ready to face each of them twice within the AFC South.

Watch out for Robinson. He was on his way to 75 catches before being shut down after Game 10 with a foot injury. He's not a blazer, but he knows how to find the first-down marker and the openings in zone coverage. The Jaguars prefer to keep Robinson, Lee and Hurns on the outside, which created a need to draft Greene, a prolifically productive player at Florida State (school-record 270 catches) who will play in the slot.

Success for the Jaguars' offense will also center around three newcomers: Thomas, who had 24 touchdown catches the last two years for Denver and gives the Jaguars a red-zone component they've lacked for years; Parnell, who was a spot starter for Dallas but was given big money ($14.5 million guaranteed) to solidify a position that has been leaky for most of this decade; and Yeldon, the 36th overall pick who had two 1,000-yard rushing years at Alabama.

DEFENSE The Jaguars were similarly flawed on defense last year, finishing 27th against the run and tied for last in interceptions (six). And the changes weren't subtle. During the opening hours of free agency, defensive end Jared Odrick, outside linebacker Dan Skuta, cornerback Davon House and free safety Sergio Brown were signed to contracts worth a combined $32.1 million guaranteed. And then the Jaguars drafted pass rusher Dante Fowler Jr., free safety James Sample and defensive tackle Michael Bennett.

Fowler, though, tore his left ACL in the team's first rookie minicamp practice and is out for the season. That leaves Odrick as the key newcomer up front. He will play the strong-side end spot, and the Jaguars hope he can be a better all-around producer than Red Bryant was last year. At the weak-side spot without projected starter Fowler, the rotation will include Chris Clemons, Andre Branch and Ryan Davis. Inside, Sen'Derrick Marks has developed into a productive, every-down tackle, but is rehabilitating from a late December ACL injury. Although ahead of schedule in late April, the guess is that the Jaguars will bring him along slowly so he can be ready for Week 1. But it's likely he will see his playing time reduced while he works back into shape. The other starter, Roy Miller, is also coming off knee surgery but is expected to be full-go for camp.

The loss of Fowler could have a crippling effect on the Jaguars' pass rush. Bradley and coordinator Bob Babich don't call many blitzes (less than 20 percent in 2015), relying on a four-man

Cheer: Mark Langello; Posluszny, Bortles: Tom DiPace

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

INJURY CONCERNS A constant on the Jaguars' defensive line the last two years has been the defensive tackle position. Sen'Derrick Marks and Roy Miller are 2013 free-agent additions who are now playing on their second contracts. But Miller was shut down late last year, and Marks tore his anterior cruciate ligament in the season finale. Both had surgery and were limited throughout the offseason. Their progress bears watching when the 2014 season begins.

OLSON'S RETURN In 2012, Greg Olson served as the Jaguars' assistant head coach/quarterbacks coach, charged with finding a way to reach former No. 10 overall pick Blaine Gabbert. Things didn't work out — Gabbert struggled before sustaining a season-ending arm injury, and Olson was caught up in the coaching staff turnover. Following two years as Oakland's offensive coordinator, Olson is back in Jacksonville as the new play-caller. This time, his task is developing former third overall pick Blake Bortles.

EARLY SEASON TESTS The Jaguars wanted a home-friendly opening to their schedule after playing four of their first six games on the road in 2013-14. And they got it, hosting Carolina and Miami. But that is followed by a three-game trip — New England, Indianapolis and Tampa Bay — for the fifth time in franchise history, a difficult test for a Jaguars team that went 0-8 on the road last year.

JAGUARS IN LONDON, PART III The Jaguars are halfway through a four-year agreement to play one "home" game a year at London's Wembley Stadium. The good — playing in England has done wonders for the Jaguars' financial bottom line. The bad — they haven't been competitive in their first two trips, losing by a combined 46 points to San Francisco and Dallas. Regardless, expect the arrangement to be extended for years to come.

SO LONG, FULLBACK Olson's arrival as offensive coordinator signaled the end of the fullback position. Will Ta'ufo'ou handled those duties the last two years but wasn't re-signed. In two-back formations, the Jaguars will use a tight end or an extra offensive lineman. Look for the team to keep five tight ends instead of the usual four.

MARRONE'S MOVE One of the most interesting coaching decisions after last season belonged to Doug Marrone. Using a loophole in his contract, he opted out of his job as the Buffalo Bills' head coach (walking away with $3 million). He was interested in the openings with Chicago and the New York Jets, but ultimately joined the Jaguars as offensive line coach.

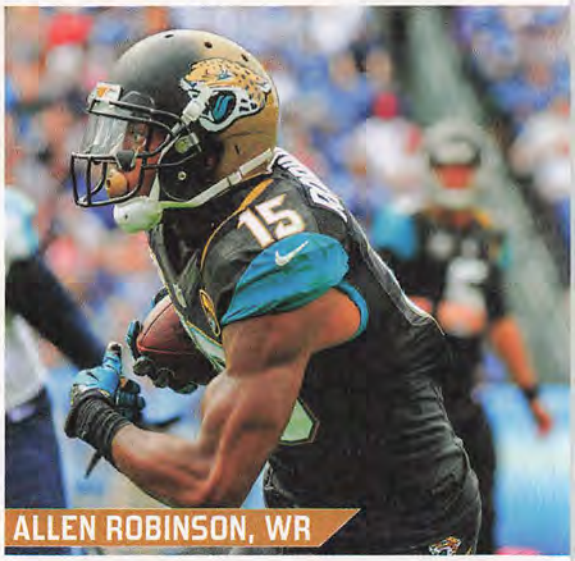
rush to provide pressure. That may not be the best strategy this year.

Linebacker depth is a concern. The starters are set entering camp — Paul Posluszny in the middle, Skuta on the strong side and Telvin Smith on the weak side. But the Jaguars, who didn't address the position in the draft, are in trouble if they have injury issues. Skuta and Smith are intriguing for different reasons. Skuta can rush the passer on third down, and Smith is simply around the football at all times. A key is Posluszny's health. He missed the last half of 2014 with a torn chest muscle.

This is a huge season for strong safety Johnathan Cyprien, now in his third year in the league. "It's time," defensive backs coach DeWayne Walker says. Time for Cyprien to change games. Time for him to create turnovers. Time for him to be noticed. The Jaguars hope that settling on Brown or Sample at free safety will create more opportunities for Cyprien to play in the box. House was signed from Green Bay to bring experience to the cornerback spot, where he'll lead Demetrius McCray, Aaron Colvin and Dwayne Gratz. Colvin could be the best of them. An ACL injury dropped him to the fourth round last year, but he played the final six games and showed flashes of being a playmaker in coverage.



ALLEN ROBINSON, WR

SPECIALISTS Kicker Josh Scobee, punter Bryan Anger and long snapper Carson Tinker will return for their 12th, fourth and third seasons, respectively, with the Jaguars. Scobee was 17-of-20 last year on field goals from under 50 yards, and Anger posted a net average of 39.6 yards. Where this unit will undergo some change is in the return game. Ace Sanders has had two years to give the punt return game a spark and hasn't produced. The candidates to replace him are Tandon Doss (out last year with an ankle injury) and Greene, the rookie receiver. Running back Denard Robinson will get the first shot on kickoff returns.

FINAL ANALYSIS This entire season hinges on the Jaguars' offense in general and the team's early-season offense in particular. Can the players, chiefly Bortles, get up to speed with Olson's offense? Can second-year receivers Robinson, Lee and Hurns take steps forward in their progress? Can Yeldon and Thomas emerge as much-needed playmakers? If all of that happens, a jump from three wins to maybe .500 could be in the offing.

Having their choice of any non-quarterback on the board, the Jaguars opted for Dante Fowler Jr., whom they view as a long-term pass-rushing threat. But that won't happen until 2016 after Fowler sustained a torn knee ligament on May 8. After Fowler, the Jaguars went need-best player available-need-need in rounds 2-5. T.J. Yeldon will get a chance to follow in the footsteps of all-time Jaguars greats Fred Taylor and Maurice Jones-Drew and be a foundation back. The Jaguars were surprised that A.J. Cann was still available, so they scooped him up to challenge veteran Zane Beadles, who was a disappointment last year. Rashad Greene (slot receiver/punt return) and Michael Bennett (interior third-down pass rusher) are expected to have immediate roles. Greene was one of the top receivers in college football the past few years. James Sample enhances the depth in the secondary.

SCOUTING THE JAGUARS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP JACKSONVILLE "Owner Shad Khan appears to be in lock step with head coach Gus Bradley and GM David Caldwell, but after a 3–13 season in 2014, the urgency to take a big step forward is there for this season. ... Bradley has done an impressive job of keeping the team's focus and energy high, but the truth is, the results must improve and almost the entire operation is riding on quarterback Blake Bortles. ... The Jags found three rookie receivers in Marqise Lee, Allen Robinson and Allen Hurns who should develop on the same track as Bortles. ... Tackle Luke Joeckel bounced back from appearing in only five games as a rookie and started all 16 in 2014. A capable line is in the works with left guard Zane Beadles and right guard Brandon Linder. ... Second-round pick T.J. Yeldon, the running back out of Alabama, should be an instant starter and will pair off with Denard Robinson. ... Defensively, they spent the third pick in the draft on Florida outside linebacker Dante Fowler Jr., and he will be a star player in the league. ... This unit has made incremental strides under Bradley and Bob Babich, but they have been woefully short in terms of having difference-making talent. ... Inside linebacker Paul Posluszny is a steady-Eddie, while weak-side linebacker Telvin Smith proved to be a nice late-round pick in 2014."

The Tennessee Titans hope that Year 2 of the Ken Whisenhunt regime will be markedly better than Year 1. In Whisenhunt's first season as head coach, the Titans bottomed out, going 2–14 and losing their final 10 games.

And while the sparse crowds at LP Field reflected just how far this franchise has fallen, it might not be the worst thing in the long run. Sinking to such low depths allowed the Titans to finally embrace a rebuild after several years of treading water with middle-of-the-pack records and no playoff appearances. Beginning with the drafting of 2014 Heisman Trophy winner Marcus Mariota to build around at quarterback, the Titans could have real hope for the future for the first time in a number of years, though it may take some time for that hope to be realized.

OFFENSE By drafting Mariota second overall, the Titans are banking that the former Duck can be a bird of a different feather when it comes to transitioning from Oregon's hurry-up spread offense to a conventional pro-style scheme. Mariota has the physical skills, and the Titans were impressed most by his football acumen throughout the draft process. Still, there are basic components of playing the position — from the simplest things such as taking the snap under center and calling plays in the huddle to more complex components such as progressions — that will take time to master. Whisenhunt, who was rigid with scrambling quarterback Jake Locker a year ago, has promised to be more flexible to accommodate Mariota, who has already been penciled in as the starter over Zach Mettenberger.

At running back, the Titans appear to be in flux. Bishop Sankey, a second-round pick a year ago, disappointed with only 569 yards rushing, and veteran Shonn Greene might not be on the roster come the season opener if fifth-round pick David Cobb shows he is capable of handling the "big back" role. Sankey didn't seem to have an extra gear as a rookie, while Greene has been injured and inconsistent in two years in Tennessee. The wild card in the running back room is Dexter McCluster, signed to a free-agent deal a year ago and then wasted as the Titans never found a role for him. A Sankey/Cobb combination is probably what the Titans are hoping for as the season opens.

In the receiving corps, the Titans have done their best to upgrade a lackluster cast. Kendall Wright's production dipped to just 57 catches after 94 in 2013, and Justin Hunter remains an enigma. The organization still believes Hunter has the talent to be an elite receiver, but he simply hasn't shown the swagger that top-flight receivers display on the field. Enter second-round pick Dorial Green-Beckham, who seems to have plenty of that to go with a 6'5", 237-pound frame. Green-Beckham, a likely top-10 pick without his off-field issues, boldly says his goal is to score at least 10 touchdowns as a rookie. The Titans signed two former 1,000-yard receivers in free agency, adding Harry Douglas and Hakeem Nicks with the hope that both can bounce back after their production dropped dramatically in 2014.

Currently, the best weapon among the receivers is tight end Delanie Walker, the best free-agent signing of the Ruston Webster era as GM. Walker led the Titans with 63 catches for a franchise-record 890 yards receiving by a tight end. Not bad, considering that three different quarterbacks started last year. The Titans added journeyman Anthony Fasano as a free agent, in large part because Craig Stevens and Taylor Thompson were both injured last year.

The offensive line's lone bright spot was 2014 first-round pick Taylor Lewan, who became a starter after Michael Roos was injured (and later retired). Right guard Chance Warmack, the 2013 first-round pick, finally started to show promise by year's end. Other than those two, it was a disaster. Left guard Andy Levitre, who signed a $46.8 million free-agent deal in 2013, was too often handled at the point of attack and was plagued by penalties as well. Center Brian Schwenke, who has been average in his two years, finished the year on injured reserve. The Titans used seven different tackles a year ago, thanks to injuries. None of them was effective. Starter Michael Oher struggled and was released. The Titans did bring back Byron Stingily to compete with free-agent signee Byron Bell, who played poorly in Carolina last year. The Titans hope that third-round pick Jeremiah Poutasi can claim a spot in camp.

DEFENSE The biggest move of the offseason for the defense wasn't a player but a coach. Legendary defensive mind Dick LeBeau, a long-time friend of Whisenhunt, comes over after parting ways with the Steelers. Ray Horton still has the title of defensive coordinator, but LeBeau is calling the shots. Personnel-wise, the Titans needed upgrades after ranking 27th overall defensively and allowing 373 yards per game in 2014. Other than adding rookie

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

NUMBERS GAME It didn't take long for the Titans to give quarterback Marcus Mariota his familiar No. 8 after being drafted. Kicker Ryan Succop, who had No. 8, changed his number to 4, but he did have a little fun with the rookie quarterback on social media before surrendering No. 8 to him. Succop tweeted an Instagram photo of himself lifting weights saying Mariota could have his number free of charge if he could win an arm wrestling match with him.

GO TITANS At least two members of the 2015 draft class were Titans fans before being selected by the team. Fifth-round running back David Cobb says that the reason he wore No. 27 for the Minnesota Golden Gophers was because he was a big fan of former Titans running back Eddie George growing up as a kid in Texas. Cobb isn't likely to get to wear 27 as a Titan, though. The number technically has not been retired, but it has not been issued to any player since George left the Titans. Rookie linebacker Deiontrez Mount of Louisville, a sixth-round pick, says he was a fan of the team as well, specifically during the era of George, Steve McNair and Jevon Kearse.

ON THE SPOT One of the players who needs to produce more in 2015 is second-year running back Bishop Sankey, who led the team with 569 yards but did not have the type of season the Titans hoped for in 2014. "I think Bishop has got to play a little bit better than he did last year from a standpoint of assignment-wise," says head coach Ken Whisenhunt. "He's been in here working very hard. I have no doubt that missing the spring last year hurt him. ... I think Bishop will be better. He understands his role better. There were some things he did well and some things he didn't do as well."

NOT A FAN Titans defensive end Jurrell Casey is a bit unusual in terms of his following of football and sports in general. Casey, the Titans' best defensive player, makes it readily known that he does not watch sports during his free time. Other than film study, if Casey is going to watch something in his free time, then it usually doesn't involve a sporting event.

RENAISSANCE MAN Tight end Craig Stevens has varied interests away from the field. Stevens is a fly fisherman in his spare time and enjoys making his own furniture in his home wood-working shop.

TARGETING 10 Second-round pick Dorial Green-Beckham has a goal to reach double digits in scores as a rookie. "I feel like I am going to be an impact coming in right away and being able to score a lot of touchdowns," he says. "I am shooting for at least 10 or more."

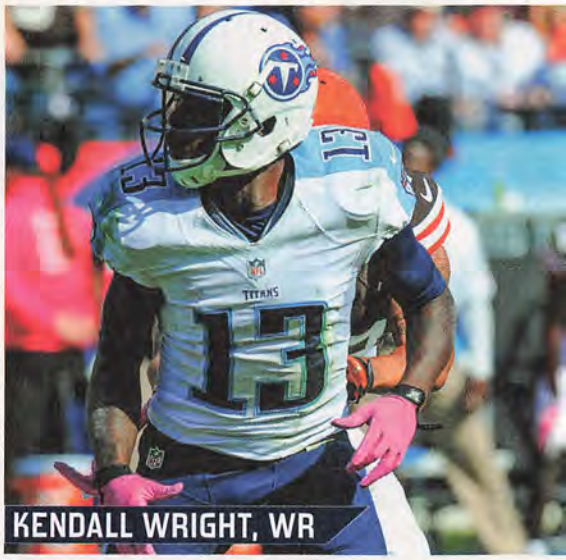
Angelo Blackson on the defensive line, the Titans kept the status quo among the front three, where end Jurrell Casey is by far the best player. Nose tackle Sammie Hill is adequate, and Ropati Pitoitua, on the other end, is a decent run stopper, but not much as a pass rusher. End Karl Klug was re-signed and is a solid role player.

The Titans needed help at outside linebacker and signed Redskins free agent Brian Orakpo, who will help if he can stay healthy. They re-upped Derrick Morgan, who made a decent transition last year from 4-3 defensive end to 3-4 linebacker. Avery Williamson, a 2014 fifth-round pick, was a nice find with 79 tackles. He will start alongside Zach Brown, lost for the year in Week 1 with torn pectoral in 2014. That drops veteran Wesley Woodyard into a reserve role.



KENDALL WRIGHT, WR

The secondary got a makeover in the offseason. Safety Bernard Pollard, who missed most of last year with an Achilles injury, popped off about the organization and was released. Da'Norris Searcy was imported from Buffalo to take his place. He will start alongside Michael Griffin, who has lost a step but still plays OK if there is sufficient talent around him. At cornerback, Jason McCourty is solid on one side, and Perrish Cox comes over from the 49ers as an upgrade over Blidi Wreh-Wilson, who struggled badly last year in coverage. Nickel back Coty Sensabaugh is so-so, but the Titans seem to like young backup safeties Marqueston Huff and Daimion Stafford, who could contribute in certain sub-packages.

SPECIALISTS The Titans made sure to re-sign reliable kicker Ryan Succop (19-of-22 on field goals), who came to the team after being cut by the Chiefs last year. Solid punter Brett Kern and long snapper Beau Brinkley received contract extensions as well. With Leon Washington not re-signed, McCluster should claim return duties. Seventh-round receiver Tre McBride or veteran Jacoby Ford could be options as well.

FINAL ANALYSIS The Titans have a long way to go before they can return to respectability. They have chosen Mariota to lead them there. The talented quarterback passes the eye test and has the smarts to give the Titans their first franchise quarterback since Steve McNair. But it will probably take some time as he adjusts to an NFL offense. Expect the Titans to be better in 2015, but they're probably still another offseason away from contending.

Starting with Marcus Mariota, almost the entire 2015 draft class will get the chance to contribute in some capacity. Mariota has already been declared the starting quarterback, and Dorial Green-Beckham will likely get a chance to play early if he lives up to the hype of his big-play potential. Jeremiah Poutasi can easily claim the starting right tackle job with a strong camp. Angelo Blackson probably falls into the defensive line rotation somewhere, while the Titans like Jalston Fowler's jack-of-all-trades type role, with plans for him to work at fullback, tight end and tailback in certain packages. Of the late-round picks, David Cobb figures into the running back rotation, while Tre McBride could earn a role not only as a receiver but also in the return game. Deiontrez Mount and Andy Gallik may need some time to develop as rookies but could still find roles on special teams in 2015.

SCOUTING THE TITANS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP TENNESSEE "Jake Locker was a free agent but retired unexpectedly, and Zach Mettenberger went 0–6 before going down with a shoulder injury last season, so the Marcus Mariota pick really makes sense. ... Bishop Sankey was disappointing as a rookie, but part of his struggles were tied to an underachieving offensive line that should be improved in 2015 with Taylor Lewan firmly entrenched at left tackle, a healthy rebound from Andy Levitre at left guard and Chance Warmack rounding back into shape at right guard. ... Tight end Delanie Walker has more to give with better quarterback play. ... The Titans do not have a legit No. 1 receiver. However, they do have hope for the continued development of Kendall Wright and Justin Hunter, and they drafted Dorial Green-Beckham, who hasn't played since 2013 due to off-field issues. ... Dick LeBeau arrives from Pittsburgh and will orchestrate the defense even though Ray Horton has the coordinator title. ... Defensive end Jurrell Casey can play, and GM Ruston Webster found a keeper at inside linebacker in Avery Williamson last year. ... They should be set in the secondary. ... There is talk of an impending ownership change in league circles, so it's imperative for the Titans to show progress for the Ken Whisenhunt/Ruston Webster administration to continue beyond this season."

FIVE-YEAR WIN TREND

Playoffs AFC Champion

1 AFC WEST FORECAST

The Broncos, coming off a 12-win season and their fourth consecutive AFC West title, may well win another 12 games and another AFC West title. But then, in the Mile High City, where the local NFL team's standards rest considerably higher than the city limits, it isn't about the regular season. And it isn't about the playoffs, either. It's about winning a Super Bowl, period, end of conversation. Question is, are the Broncos any closer to doing it this season than they were in their three previous seasons with Peyton Manning under center? By all accounts, they're not as talented as years past, with a handful of impact players having left via free agency. But general manager John Elway, having cleaned house after last year's one-and-done fiasco in January, is hopeful that the new coaching staff, headlined by head coach Gary Kubiak and defensive coordinator Wade Phillips, can give the 39-year-old Manning one last chance at feeling the confetti.

OFFENSE The media has had a field day speculating how Manning will fare in Kubiak's zone-blocking, run-oriented offense. While only time will tell how good a fit the two will be for each other, this much is safe to say: Manning will go into this season considerably healthier than he ended the last one. He was altogether ordinary in the latter stages of the 2014 season, throwing 17 touchdown passes and 12 interceptions in the final nine regular-season games, leading to speculation that Father Time was fast approaching in his rear-view mirror. Four words: Don't count on it. Manning's problems were more a function of a tear in his right quadriceps and a decimated offensive line that gave him little time to throw. Manning, in fact, agreed to return for a fourth season only after receiving assurances that the issues on the offensive line would be addressed.

But even assuming that the offensive line will be improved, Manning doesn't figure to put up the same type of passing numbers that long ago assured him a bronze bust in Canton. Kubiak has a long history of producing huge numbers in the running game, with relatively unheralded talents such as Terrell Davis, Mike Anderson and Arian Foster becoming fantasy league studs in his offense. Now it's C.J. Anderson's turn to see how productive he can be behind Kubiak's zone-blocking schemes. Anderson, undrafted out of Cal in 2013, began last season as a blip on the depth chart and finished it in the Pro Bowl. After logging 17 carries in the Broncos' first seven games, he rolled for 648 yards in the final six.

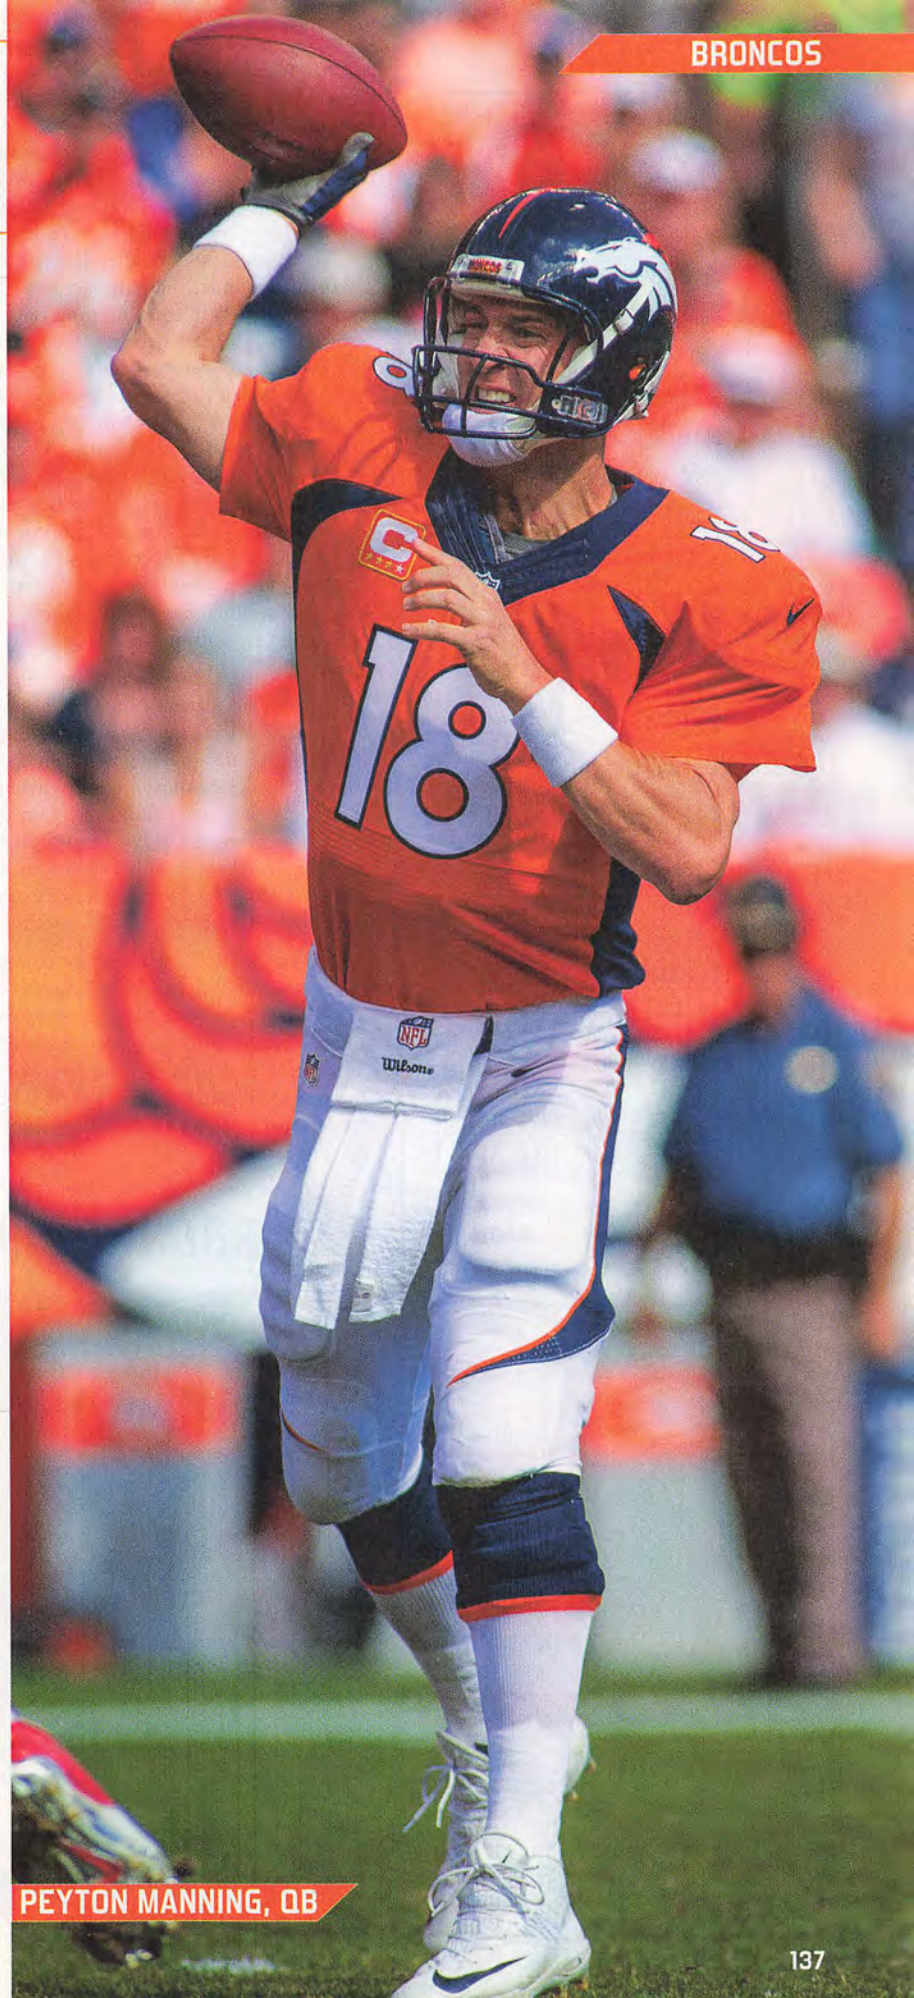
Not that Manning won't remain the focal point of the offense. He threw 39 touchdown passes in 2014 and could approach that number again. He'll have to do it without tight end Julius Thomas, who wasn't presented with a serious contract offer after catching 12 touchdown passes in 2014. Thomas signed with Jacksonville, leaving newcomer Owen Daniels as the main pass-catching threat at tight end. Then there's wide receiver Demaryius Thomas, a mercurial talent who refused to attend the team's offseason workouts or Manning's annual passing camp at Duke University after being slapped with the franchise tag. If you're looking for an X-factor, there you have it. If the two sides can't agree on a long-term contract, Thomas' attitude issues could be a divisive factor in what could be Manning's final NFL season. No such issues are in play with wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders, who clicked with Manning from the earliest moments of 2014. Sanders caught 101 balls, 10 fewer than Thomas.

If Kubiak and his staff can revamp the offensive line, and if Thomas buys in, there's no reason to believe the Broncos won't have one of the league's most lethal offenses.

DEFENSE Phillips, by his own admission, was "a lousy head coach" in his previous life. But if there were a Hall of Fame for assistant coaches, the 68-year-old Phillips would be a lock. The man has a way of making rock stars out of pass rushers, having worked with the likes of Reggie White, DeMarcus Ware, Rickey Jackson and J.J. Watt. The Broncos' pass rush was sporadic last season, but with Phillips and No. 1 draft choice Shane Ray in the equation, that figures to change. Ware racked up 60.5 sacks in four seasons while playing in Phillips' 3-4 scheme in Dallas. He should be good for double digits again coming off the corner opposite Von Miller, who needs a big season to solidify his case for a possible $100-million contract.

Ray will be in the mix mostly as a nickel pass rusher, but his role could expand as the season wears on. The defensive line has its share of question marks, particular on the nose, where 2013 first-rounder Sylvester Williams, a prototypical 4-3 tackle, has been challenged by the coaches to step up — or else. The Broncos' blueprint calls for Bill Kollar, one of most respected defensive line coaches in the business, to solidify things up front.

NEW ERA



PEYTON MANNING, QB

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

HOMECOMING PARADE Only time will tell if the Broncos' season turns out special, but this much is clear before the first snap of 2015: Several of the new coaches view Denver as a special situation. Gary Kubiak arrived in Denver in 1983 as an eighth-round draft choice and, after a nine-year playing career, served as Mike Shanahan's offensive coordinator from 1995-2005. New offensive coordinator Rick Dennison also played and coached for the Broncos, and defensive coordinator Wade Phillips got his first opportunity as an NFL head coach in Denver in 1993. Special teams coordinator Joe DeCamillis ranks as one of the league's top assistants, but he was barely out of college back in the day when he joined father-in-law Dan Reeves' Broncos staff. Says DeCamillis, "I wouldn't call it a family reunion. I'd call it getting to a place where you're comfortable and you know the organization. It's a dream come true for me."

WADE IN THE SHADE At 68, Phillips could have done what his dad, Bum Phillips, did back in the day: Ride off into the Texas sunset after a distinguished career. Instead, Phillips decided to join Kubiak's staff in Denver. Phillips coached with Kubiak in Houston and was the Broncos' defensive coordinator in 1989 when Kubiak was the Broncos' backup quarterback. Phillips went on to become the Broncos' head coach from 1993-94. Phillips on returning to Denver a quarter-century after arriving as the defensive coordinator: "It's great to be back. We had six great years here. I said it when I was here, this is a great town because they expect the team to win. The fans here, they demand a lot, they expect a lot, but I think it helps our team."

SUPER STUPOR After losing to the Seahawks in the Super Bowl after the 2013 season, the Broncos were one and done in last year's playoffs. No surprise there. No team since the 1972 Dolphins has won the NFL championship the year after losing the Super Bowl. And no team has made it back after losing the game since the '93 Bills.

MONEY MAN Peyton Manning took a $4 million pay cut to return for what could be his farewell tour. So what did he do in the aftermath of losing all that money? He donated $3 million to the University of Tennessee, where he arrived as a freshman in 1994. Don't pass the hat for No. 18. Manning is the face of countless commercials and has 20-plus Papa John's pizza stores in his portfolio. Oh, and did we mention he has been paid more than any other player in NFL history? Consider this: Manning, the No. 1 pick in the 1998 draft, has pocketed $80 million more than Tom Brady, a lowly sixth-rounder in 2000 after his days at the University of Michigan.

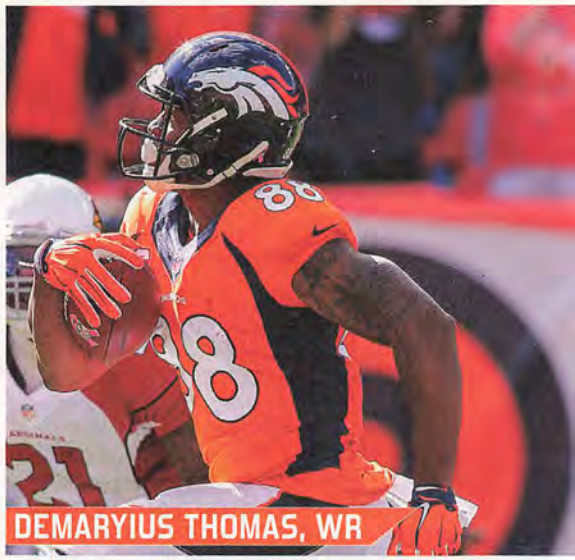
All in all, Phillips and his staff have a lot of nice pieces with which to work, including a handful of Pro Bowlers. "This is probably the best situation defensively that I've come into," says Phillips. The starting corners, Aqib Talib and Chris Harris, form one of the top tandems in the business, and Bradley Roby, the 2014 first-rounder, had an exceptional rookie season. While having three quality corners is a basic necessity for a Super Bowl contender in today's NFL, it's conceivable that Roby could shift to free safety after the free-agent departure of Rahim Moore. Add hard-hitting safety T.J. Ward to the mix, and the Broncos' secondary should be among the best in the business. If the pass rush improves as Phillips' history suggests it will, the Broncos could improve significantly over last season's 25 forced turnovers, which tied for 13th in the league.



DEMARYIUS THOMAS, WR

SPECIALISTS The Broncos are one of the few NFL teams that can afford to burn two roster spots on kickers. Veteran Connor Barth, who made 15-of-16 field-goal attempts in 2014, doesn't have the leg to consistently produce touchbacks in the altitude, so Brandon McManus figures to handle kickoffs. Punter Britton Colquitt is coming off a mediocre season, but his roster spot is all but guaranteed. The coaches will consider a cast of seemingly thousands as return candidates, with Sanders a possibility as a punt returner and Omar Bolden and Andre Caldwell in the picture as kickoff returners. Elway and his staff didn't draft a college player with a significant history in the return game, but a handful of rookies will get a look. Yes, there are a number of candidates to sift through, but look for new special-teams coordinator Joe DeCamillis to get the most out of the return game.

FINAL ANALYSIS For a team coming off a Super Bowl appearance, there was a lot of unrest surrounding the 2014 Broncos. Sure enough, when they came up short in the playoffs, Elway didn't waste any time blowing up the coaching staff. The presence of Kubiak and a veteran staff represents a breath of fresh air for the players, who are anxious to buy in to the new approach. Assuming Manning stays healthy, there's no reason to believe the Broncos won't win the West and be a factor in the playoffs. To win the Super Bowl, though, they'll need to be on a roll, not an emotional downswing as they were last season, when the playoffs arrive.

The Broncos entered the draft with glaring needs on the offensive line and at safety. So what did they address? The pass rush, of course. When Shane Ray was cited for marijuana possession the week of the draft, the Broncos' front office immediately went to work. John Elway spoke at length with Ray and came away convinced that, if Ray began to slide, the Broncos should try to trade up to get him. His presence gives the Broncos a potentially elite pass rusher to keep Von Miller and DeMarcus Ware fresh. Ty Sambrailo could supplant Chris Clark at right tackle, and fourth-rounder Max Garcia could emerge as the starter at center. Garcia will enter training camp as a swing man between guard and center, but the center job is up for grabs. The Broncos believe tight end Jeff Heuerman can be a weapon in the passing game, but the Ohio State product tore his ACL in a rookie minicamp in May and will miss his rookie season.

SCOUTING THE BRONCOS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP DENVER "Peyton Manning returns for what might be his last season, although at 39, he feels that a high level of play is still attainable. ... If it is, it will likely be because Gary Kubiak's emphasis on the run game and play-action will take some of the load off the future Hall of Famer. ... Kubiak takes over for John Fox, who flamed out in the postseason for the third year in a row. ... Wide receiver Demaryius Thomas was retained under the franchise tag. He is a supremely talented player that has prospered under Manning's guidance. ... Emmanuel Sanders filled the slot role well in 2014, but how much will that change under Kubiak? ... Cody Latimer must take a big step forward after catching only two passes as a rookie. ... The offensive line is sort of ordinary, but they get by because the QB simply doesn't hold onto the football. ... Left tackle Ryan Clady is clearly their best lineman, but the rest are just guys. ... On defense, they are set up front with Sylvester Williams, Derek Wolfe and Malik Jackson in their Base 3-4. ... Von Miller, DeMarcus Ware and first-round draft pick Shane Ray will form one of the best pass-rushing trios in all of football. ... At safety, T.J. Ward always brings the right kind of demeanor, and Darian Stewart was signed away from the Ravens during free agency."

The only team with wins over both the AFC and NFC champions on its résumé in 2014? That would be Andy Reid's Kansas City Chiefs, who, despite a confounding slew of injuries and suspensions, tended to play up — or down — to just about every opponent last fall. Lose to Tennessee at home, then crush New England; top Miami and Buffalo on the road, then lose at Oakland. Which explains the end result: A roller-coaster, schizophrenic 9–7 campaign.

A healthy Jamaal Charles would get 2015 off on the right foot. As would a happy Justin Houston, who put together perhaps the quietest 22-sack season — a half-sack short of Michael Strahan's NFL record — in modern NFL history, a run for the ages overshadowed by the monster campaign of J.J. Watt. But a slate that features just seven true home games — a Nov. 1 date with Detroit is being played in London — only makes a challenging schedule that much tougher to navigate.

OFFENSE Charles says he was never more "frustrated" as a pro than last fall, but the Pro Bowl back still accounted for 1,324 yards, averaged 5.0 yards per carry and totaled 14 touchdowns — nine rushing — on one good leg. Not much was done to upgrade the position behind backup Knile Davis, who could see more work to limit the wear and tear on Charles.

Quarterback Alex Smith signed a big-money extension before the start of the regular season that set him within his peers but also put him the squarely in the sights of some Chiefs fans who see that cash as better splashed elsewhere. Still one of the smarter and most accurate (65.3 percent completion rate in 2014) passers in the game, Smith has, on paper, as many toys to play with as he's ever had in Kansas City. Chase Daniel is gaining street cred as one of the NFL's top backups, and he's paid like it ($3.75 million base salary in 2015).

The Chiefs became the first team since the 1970 AFL-NFL merger to go an entire regular season without a touchdown thrown to a wideout. Jeremy Maclin, signed away from Philadelphia to replace aging Dwayne Bowe, is expected to change all that, and quickly. Second-year target Albert Wilson found his groove over the final third of 2014; incoming draftee Chris Conley has crazy tools; and veteran Jason Avant, a former teammate of Maclin's and a longtime Reid protégé, knows this offense back to front. Tight end Travis Kelce (862 receiving yards, five touchdowns) was a revelation in his first full active season; if he keeps his temper and ball security in check, Kelce could be the best tight end to put on a Chiefs uniform since Tony Gonzalez was traded out of town in 2009.

A succession of injuries and Eric Fisher's bum shoulder forced general manager John Dorsey to piece together a makeshift offensive line last fall, and it showed, as the total sacks allowed jumped from 41 to 49 while Smith spent many Sundays running for his life. The addition of Ben Grubbs (Saints) and Paul Fanaika (Cardinals) should stabilize the interior blocking, but center Rodney Hudson, now with Oakland, could be sorely missed.

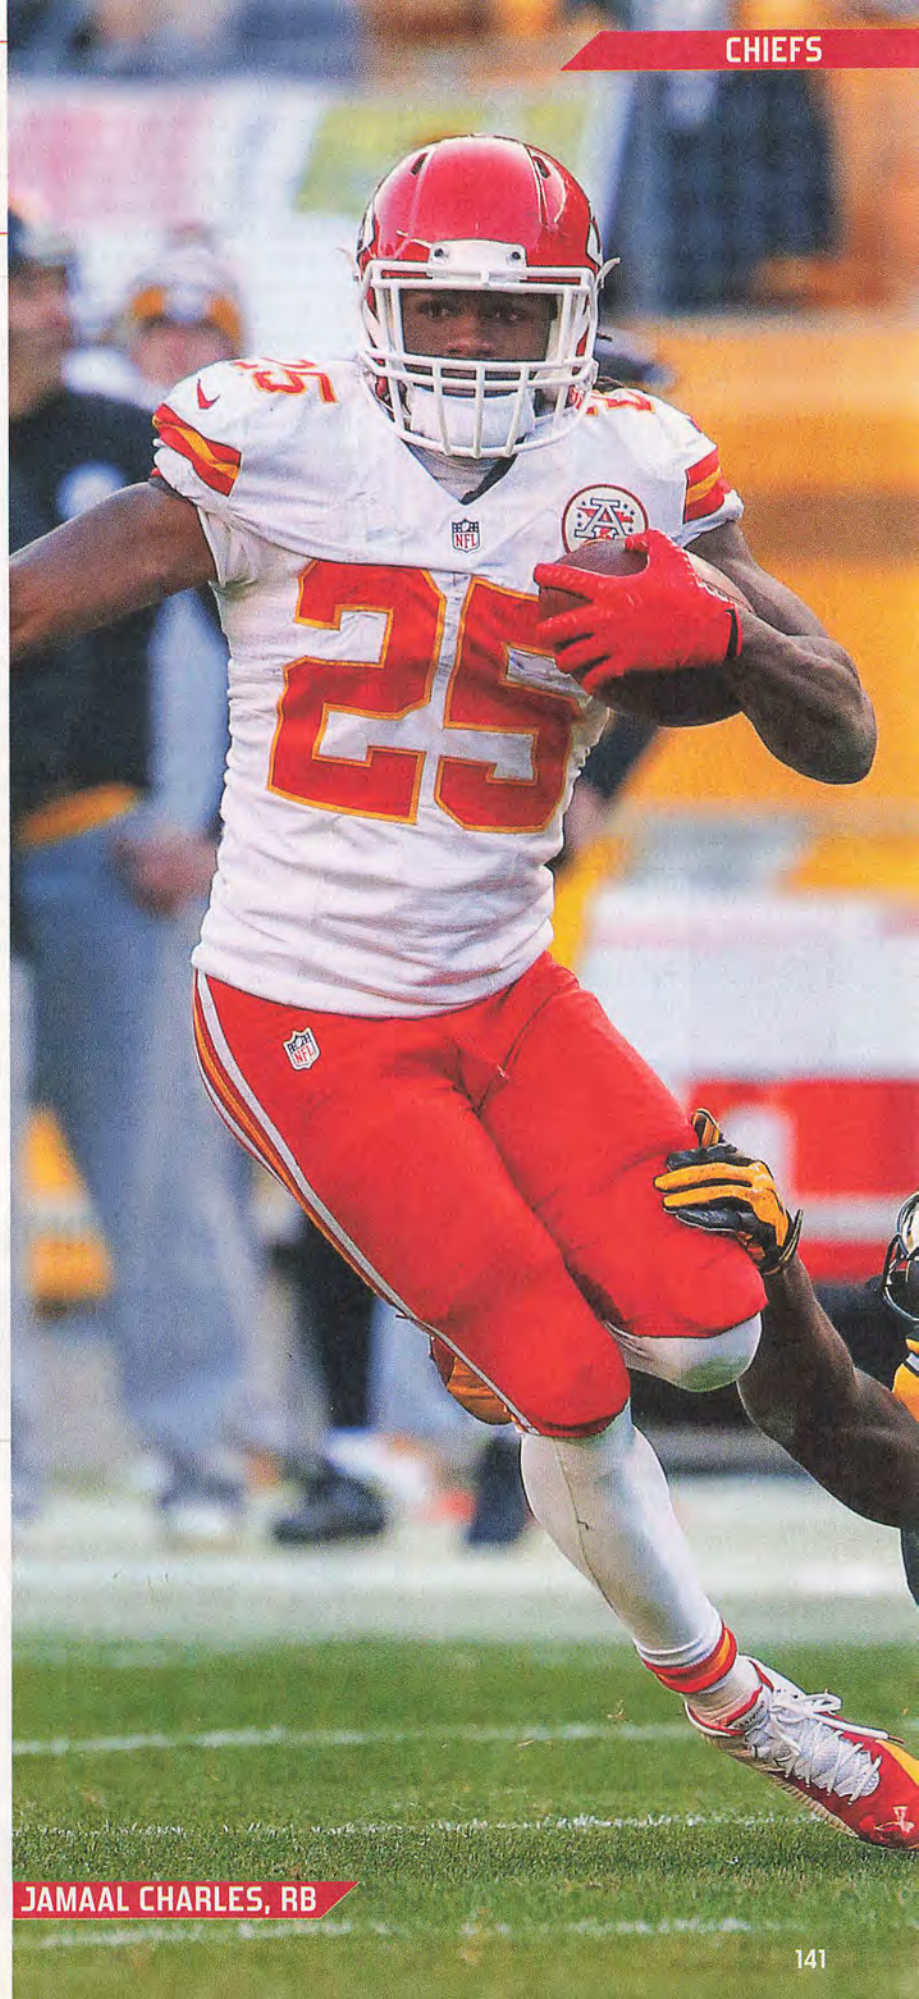
DEFENSE Things you can count on: death, taxes and four grinding quarters each week from nose tackle Dontari Poe. The Memphis native led all NFL interior defensive linemen in snaps played for a second straight year, rolling up a career-best six sacks in the process. Poe should benefit from the return of veteran end Mike DeVito, one of two defensive starters to suffer a season-ending Achilles tendon tear in a Week 1. DeVito's injury allowed the club to get longer looks at Allen Bailey (five sacks) and Jaye Howard (one sack) at end in defensive coordinator Bob Sutton's 3-4 scheme. With DeVito and former reserve Mike Catapano reportedly healed up, the Chiefs have strength, depth and flexibility up front.

Stalwart linebacker Derrick Johnson was the other veteran to tear an Achilles in the home opener, and the unit never quite recovered from the loss of its spiritual leader — especially against the run, where the Chiefs seemed to really wear down after early November. Like DeVito, Johnson said in the spring that he felt at least 80 percent of the way back. Even at that he is a more reliable anchor in the middle than super subs Josh Mauga and James-Michael Johnson, special-teams contributors who were forced to carry the rope in No. 56's absence. Mauga was re-signed and is expected to have the inside track and a starting spot, but don't be surprised if rookies Ramik Wilson and D.J. Alexander work their way into specific packages.

Rather than pout over the failure to land a long-term contract, Houston took his grief out on opposing quarterbacks, stringing together a career-best in sacks and affirming his status as one of the most exciting pass rushers in the game. Contract issues still loomed in the spring, though, and the former Georgia star bristled when the Chiefs slapped the franchise tag on him in March, staying away from the start of the voluntary spring OTAs.

Houston, Charles: Bruce Schwartzman; Cheerleader: Margaret Bowles

NEW ERA



JAMAAL CHARLES, RB

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

BERRY, BERRY STRONG As of the spring, the Chiefs weren't counting on the quick return of Pro Bowl safety Eric Berry for the fall of 2015 as the defensive standout battles Hodgkin lymphoma. But they aren't necessarily counting him out, either. "Those treatments kind of knock the dog out of you," Andy Reid told reporters before OTAs got underway, "but he's fought through it, and he's working out like a wild man."

MAY THE FORCE BE WITH YOU A journalism major with an interest in broadcasting, new Chiefs wideout Chris Conley also moonlights as an amateur filmmaker. At the University of Georgia, the gifted receiver combined two of the loves of his life when he made a 26-minute "Star Wars" fan film, titled "Retribution" — and even got his college coach, Mark Richt, to appear in it.

FISHER: HEAVYWEIGHT CHAMP? Left tackle Eric Fisher, the Chiefs' No. 1 overall pick in 2013, hasn't fulfilled lofty expectations through his first two mostly injury-plagued campaigns. But the former Central Michigan star says he's coming off his first truly healthy winter as an NFL player — his slow return from shoulder surgery showed last fall — and has even taken up something new in training to help his game: boxing. "I think that has really helped my body development," he says. "I couldn't believe the workout you can get from boxing — the hand work and the hand quickness. I really think that brought me a long way."

IT'S ALL IN THE FAMILY, DOGG Rookie cornerback Marcus Peters, like new teammate De'Anthony Thomas, is pals with rapper/entertainer Snoop Dogg, who went to Twitter during the NFL Draft to congratulate the former University of Washington star on his pro destination. Peters is also the cousin of Seattle tailback Marshawn Lynch, to whom he says he is related on his father's side of the family. Like Lynch, Peters hails from Oakland.

THIS PLACE IS SO CLEAN! Former GM Scott Pioli was lambasted a few years back when word got out about his obsessiveness over finding a loose candy bar wrapper in a stairwell at the Chiefs' training complex. But you won't find those wrappers lying around anymore — something that new guard Ben Grubbs, acquired in a trade with New Orleans, noticed right away the first time he walked into the facility. "Yeah, you'd be surprised what you come into," Grubbs says. "I think it just shows a lot about you, tells a lot about you if you take care of the things you have and be respectful of the people who clean because they're not here to pick up after you, they're here to be a part of something big. I think that plays a part into the winning mindset."

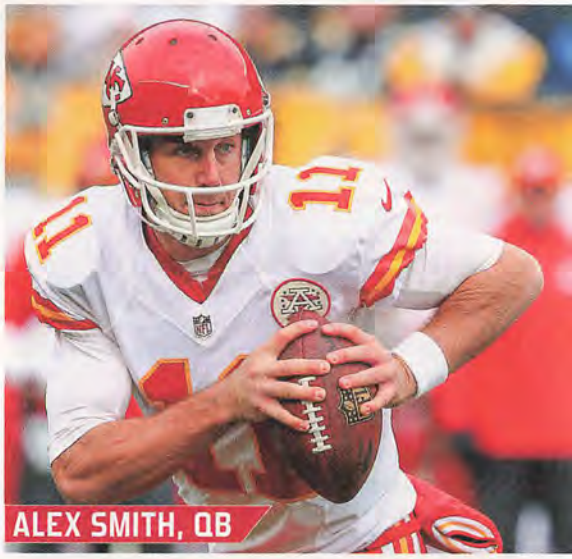
Houston's outside linebacker bookend, Tamba Hali, saw his production slip (11 sacks in 2013; six last fall) but endeared himself to Chiefs fans by taking a pay cut rather than trying to force his way onto the open market via a release. First-round pick Dee Ford was a non-factor during the first half of 2014 but could take on more snaps (and responsibility) if the 31-year-old Hali fades.

As stunning as the Johnson/DeVito injuries were, it was nothing compared to the shocking news of late November, when Pro Bowl safety Eric Berry was diagnosed with Hodgkin lymphoma, ending an injury-plagued season on a somber note. While expected to make a full recovery, Berry may not be healthy enough to return to football fitness before the start of the regular season. With that in mind, the Chiefs signed veteran Tyvon Branch from Oakland and re-upped with journeyman Ron Parker, who can slot into any role in Sutton's secondary but seemed to excel as a safety. Cornerback Sean Smith is coming off his best season (18 pass breakups) in Kansas City but was expected to receive a multi-game suspension for this fall because of a drunk-driving incident dating back to last summer.



ALEX SMITH, QB

SPECIALISTS De'Anthony Thomas was drafted to change games with his legs, and the speedster didn't disappoint as a rookie, averaging 11.9 yards per punt return with a touchdown and 30.6 yards per kickoff return. Thomas is a perfect complement to Davis, who has run a kickoff back for a score twice now in two seasons. After an impressive spring and summer, rookie kicker Cairo Santos beat out veteran Ryan Succop and rebounded from a terrible regular-season debut to hit 25-of-30 field-goal attempts and 8-of-12 from 40 yards or longer. Punter Dustin Colquitt (44.6 yards per boot) is the locker room's resident grey beard, having survived five coaches and three GMs since joining the club in 2005.

FINAL ANALYSIS Peyton Manning is fading, but he's 13–1 against the Chiefs; as long as he's at the controls, the Broncos probably aren't going anywhere. A schedule that pairs the Chiefs with the NFC North doesn't do them many favors, nor does getting stuck away from Arrowhead Stadium from Halloween to Thanksgiving. But three of the final four games are winnable and at home, and the locker room believes in Reid. If an answer is found at center and if Kelce stays healthy, the Chiefs should be primed to chase a playoff berth again.

Marcus Peters – who was booted from the Washington football program after a series of transgressions on and off the field – has more red flags in his corner than United Nations Plaza. But insiders believe Andy Reid and his staff can harness his competitive juices the right way. And if they can't, well, enter Steven Nelson, who shares a lot of the same tough, relentless traits as Peters but in a smaller package. Mitch Morse had some issues with snaps as a college center but is expected to get a long look at the position in camp. Chris Conley is a physical freak who posted a record 45-inch vertical leap at the Combine. Ramik Wilson has a shot to play right away at the inside linebacker spot opposite Derrick Johnson, while the quick D.J. Alexander, athletic James O'Shaughnessy and powerful Rakeem Nunez-Roches could be third-day steals if they stick.

SCOUTING THE CHIEFS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP KANSAS CITY "With zero explosiveness in the passing game, the Chiefs allowed Dwayne Bowe to walk and probably overpaid for the Eagles' Jeremy Maclin. ... They are very high on second-year player Albert Wilson. And look for De'Anthony Thomas to get an increased role in 2015 after doing some good things on special teams. ... Their two best offensive producers are running back Jamaal Charles and tight end Travis Kelce. ... The line allowed 49 sacks, and Rodney Hudson left for the Raiders in free agency. They are banking on Eric Fisher getting healthy and playing well at left tackle. This unit may be the most worrisome on the entire roster. ... Nose tackle Dontari Poe is a Pro Bowl-caliber player, and he's very durable. ... Justin Houston has been franchised after a 22-sack season, and he has really developed into a complete outside linebacker. His counterpart, Tamba Hali, continues to plug along and will always chip in 6-to-10 sacks per year. ... The Chiefs took corner Marcus Peters from Washington with their first-round pick, and they are gambling that his character and personality can be managed. He will line up opposite of Sean Smith with the thinking that they now have the athleticism and length to compete with the receivers of the AFC West."

It's been 13 seasons since the Raiders made the playoffs and that long since they finished above .500. Bill Callahan led them to an 11–5 regular-season record in 2002 and to Super Bowl XXXVII, where they were crushed by Tampa Bay and former Oakland coach Jon Gruden. The next year the Raiders went 4–12 and Callahan was fired. Since then, Norv Turner, Art Shell, Lane Kiffin, Tom Cable, Hue Jackson, Dennis Allen and Tony Sparano have tried but failed to resurrect a once-dominant franchise that has won three Super Bowls overall but none in the past 31 seasons. Enter former Jacksonville Jaguars coach Jack Del Rio, a Bay Area native who will try to lead the team back to respectability and, ultimately, prominence in the NFL.

"I'm really not spending a whole lot of time worrying about what was," Del Rio said at the NFL Scouting Combine. "I'm really focused on what needs to be going forward. We're going to have a very competitive mentality throughout our organization in everything we're doing."

Del Rio spent the past three seasons as defensive coordinator for the Denver Broncos, who won the AFC West last season, finishing nine games ahead of the Raiders. That's a huge gap to close, and the Raiders had hoped to gain ground after entering free agency with more than $60 million in salary cap space. Owner Mark Davis said he was ready to back up the Brinks truck and spend big money to land big-name free agents, but the Ndamukong Suhs and DeMarco Murrays of the free-agent world went elsewhere. So Raiders general manager Reggie McKenzie spread the money out among a group of solid, less expensive players, including center Rodney Hudson, middle linebacker Curtis Lofton and defensive tackle Dan Williams.

OFFENSE The Raiders ranked last in total offense, last in rushing, 26th in passing and 31st in scoring. New offensive coordinator Bill Musgrave faces a huge challenge, but at least McKenzie got him a true No. 1 receiver, taking Alabama's Amari Cooper with the fourth overall choice in the draft. Former 49er Michael Crabtree will likely start alongside Cooper, giving second-year quarterback Derek Carr two sure-handed targets who know how to get open. Shortly after the draft, Oakland released wide receiver James Jones, who led the team with 73 catches last season. Rod Streater and Andre Holmes, a pair of big, young receivers, should compete for playing time. Tight end Mychal Rivera is coming off a 58-catch second season, but Clive Walford, a third-round pick from Miami, could wind up starting because he's a solid receiver who can also block, which is not Rivera's strong suit.

Musgrave, who spent last season as quarterbacks coach for Chip Kelly in Philadelphia, plans to use some of Kelly's warp-speed spread attack. That should help Carr, who thrived in an up-tempo offense at Fresno State. Carr started all 16 games as a rookie. He passed for 21 TDs with 12 interceptions, and was sacked only 24 times. But Carr averaged just 5.5 yards per pass, lower than any other quarterback with a top-40 passer rating. That number should improve now that he has a year's experience in the NFL and more weapons on the field.

Running back Latavius Murray appears ready to become the Raiders' No. 1 running back after Darren McFadden left as a free agent and Maurice Jones-Drew retired. The 6'3", 225-pound Murray rushed for 424 yards and two TDs on 82 carries for the season and started the final three games. Roy Helu Jr. will give Oakland a change of pace out of the backfield, and Trent Richardson will try to ignite his NFL career in what could be his last chance. Pro Bowl fullback Marcel Reece will likely be used in a variety of roles in Musgrave's scheme to take better advantage of his receiving and running skills.

The Raiders' offensive line gave Carr decent protection but opened too few holes for running backs last season. The addition of Hudson and the further development of second-year left guard Gabe Jackson could help Oakland's power running game. Left tackle Donald Penn had a strong season last year after signing with Oakland as a free agent. Austin Howard, a former Jet, started at right guard last year in his first season as a Raider, but he'll move to right tackle, his best position, and battle Menelik Watson for the job. The starting job at right guard could come down to a battle between veteran Khalif Barnes and rookie Jon Feliciano.

DEFENSE The Raiders ranked 21st in total defense last season and gave up 28.2 points per game, more than any other team in the NFL. New defensive coordinator Ken Norton Jr. and Del Rio have plenty of work to do just to make the defense respectable, let alone dominant. They have a nice building block in outside linebacker Khalil Mack, who had a superb rookie season after being taken with the fifth-overall pick in the draft. Mack was a monster against

Peter Brouillet

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

DIFFERENT SORT OF OFFSEASON Quarterback Derek Carr took a two-week break after the season ended and then got back to work. But unlike last year, he didn't have to prepare for the NFL Combine and pre-draft workouts and interviews. "I didn't have to worry about any of that," Carr says. "I just had to go out and train. I knew what I was training for this time. That was nice, to just be out there knowing what I need to work on to help make my game better at the NFL level, instead of working on my 40 start. Hopefully I'll never have to run another one."

BAY AREA HOMECOMING For running back Roy Helu Jr., signing with Oakland as a free agent is a homecoming of sorts. Helu was born in nearby Danville and graduated from San Ramon Valley High School. He played his first four NFL seasons for Washington, which drafted him in the fourth round out of Nebraska in 2011. "It's appealing just to return to the familiarity, and with my family being in close proximity, their support and their support of my family with my wife and our kids," Helu says. "There was a lot of appeal to come back."

LEADING BY EXAMPLE Second-year outside linebacker Khalil Mack says his new coaches expect him to become a bigger leader this season, but that doesn't mean he'll be more vocal. "They want me to be a guy that steps in," Mack says. "Jack (Del Rio) understands the type of guy I am. I told him I like to go out and use my actions to speak loudly. He understands that, being a defensive guy. I am excited. I am ready to go out and play now for real."

PRACTICE MAKES PERFECT Wide receiver Amari Cooper comes to the Raiders with a reputation for being a superb and polished route runner, a rare quality for rookie wideouts. "I've been playing receiver since I first started playing football in the second or third grade," Cooper says. "I think that's kind of rare because usually when you're really young, the best athletes usually play running back because you run the ball more when you're younger. I think it was an advantage to me to be playing receiver for a long time, and I think that's where my route-running ability comes from."

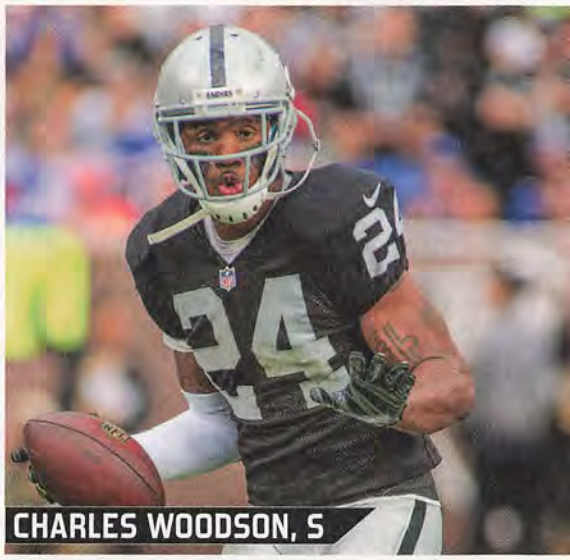
the run, and the Raiders believe he can become a game-changing pass rusher, too. He had only four sacks as a rookie. The Raiders should have a stronger and deeper linebacker corps after adding Lofton, who will start between Mack and Sio Moore or and ex-Seahawks outside linebacker Malcolm Smith. Miles Burris was released just days after the Raiders drafted a pair of linebackers.

Free safety Charles Woodson, who turns 39 in October, led the Raiders in tackles (110) and interceptions (four) and will play his 18th NFL season, giving Oakland's defense an unquestioned leader. Nate Allen, a free-agent pickup from Philadelphia, should start alongside Woodson at strong safety. The question is whether the Raiders will have enough quality cornerbacks. They are counting heavily on D.J. Hayden having a breakthrough campaign after two injury-plagued seasons. Hayden, a first-round pick in 2013, could be paired with T.J. Carrie, who had a strong rookie season last year after being drafted in the seventh round.



CHARLES WOODSON, S

The Raiders had just 22 sacks last season, and defensive end Justin Tuck led the team with five. They desperately need to generate more pass-rush pressure, but McKenzie did little in free agency or the draft to boost Oakland's pass rush. Defensive end Mario Edwards Jr., a second-round pick from Florida State, had only eight career sacks. So it will be largely up to Mack and Tuck to get to the quarterback.

SPECIALISTS Kicker Sebastian Janikowski, 37, didn't get much work last season, but he made 19-of-22 attempts, including a 57-yarder, after going 21-of-30 in 2013. The Raiders would like to reduce punter Marquette King's workload. He punted 109 times last season, averaging 45.2 yards with a net average of 40.0 in his second year since replacing Shane Lechler. Carrie handled most of the punt return duties last year, averaging 7.5 yards with no touchdowns. Taiwan Jones, a speedster who suffered a season-ending foot injury in the opener last year, could give the Raiders a dangerous kickoff return man if he's healthy.

FINAL ANALYSIS After back-to-back solid drafts, the Raiders have raised their talent level and added some solid building blocks, particularly Mack, Cooper and Carr. They won three of their final six games last season, and a .500 season this year is not out of the question. That will depend on how quickly the team adapts to yet another coaching change.

Amari Cooper is a precise route runner with explosive speed and should become Oakland's first 1,000-yard receiver since Randy Moss in 2005. The Raiders have an opening in their starting lineup at right defensive end, and Mario Edwards Jr. will likely fill it, if he keeps his weight under control. He's solid against the run but won't solve the Raiders' pass-rush problems. Clive Walford gives the Raiders something they've lacked — a tight end who can both catch and block. He has a great chance to start as a rookie. Jon Feliciano will compete with Khalif Barnes for the vacant starting job at right guard. Linebacker Ben Heeney is a tackling machine who should earn his money on special teams as a rookie. Max Valles had nine sacks last season and could earn a role as a nickel pass rusher.

SCOUTING THE RAIDERS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP OAKLAND "Everything that was said about the Raiders going into the 2014 season came true: No firepower on offense and too many aged players on defense. ... The good news is that GM Reggie McKenzie hit on outside linebacker Khalil Mack, quarterback Derek Carr and guard Gabe Jackson with his first three picks in the 2014 draft, and they are all good, young players to build around in the future. ... Carr is their greatest asset, so they chose wide receiver Amari Cooper at pick No. 4 and tight end Clive Walford in the third round to give him more options. Cooper is a pro-ready talent that can line up anywhere and help Carr immediately, while Walford is a gifted pass catcher that can threaten the seam. ... The offensive line should be bolstered in the middle with former Chiefs center Rodney Hudson, but I'm still not sure they are good enough on the edges with Donald Penn and Austin Howard. ... Defensively, Mack was sensational as a rookie and looks to be a star in the making. ... The back end is a work in progress, and this part of their roster could derail everything. If they played a game tomorrow, D.J. Hayden and T.J. Carrie would be the opening corners, but Keith McGill is expected to challenge for playing time. ... The Raiders were bad in a lot of spots, but their bigger issue was not taking care of the football."

Almost every conversation concerning the Chargers eventually veers to the question of whether they will move to the Los Angeles area beginning with the 2016 season. While the City of San Diego has never been this motivated to try to come up with a realistic plan to build a replacement for aging Qualcomm Stadium, the Chargers have never been this close to bolting up the freeway to L.A.

While the contentious issue plays out between team ownership and City Hall, general manager Tom Telesco and coach Mike McCoy are trying to stay focused on how to improve on last year's mostly unsatisfying performance. The Chargers finished third in the AFC West for the second straight year and missed the playoffs for the fourth time in five seasons.

While stars Philip Rivers, Antonio Gates and Eric Weddle return, there's a lot of room for improvement for a team that has gone 19–15 in two seasons under McCoy, including a playoff win and loss after the 2013 season.

OFFENSE Most of the pre-draft buzz surrounding the Bolts was a rumor that they would trade Rivers to the Tennessee Titans in order to draft Heisman Trophy winner Marcus Mariota. Rivers is entering the final season of his contract and has expressed reservations about moving to the Los Angeles area — if that's what the team decides to do. The Bolts didn't trade Rivers, so he'll be back for his 10th season as starter. Rivers is coming off an up-and-down season that ended when he was sacked seven times in a lackluster loss at Kansas City in the season finale that knocked the Bolts out of playoff contention.

As L.A. rumors began to swirl, Telesco worked on two areas that hurt the Chargers in 2014 — a shaky offensive line and an unproductive running game. He re-signed left tackle King Dunlap, who had a big 2014 season protecting Rivers' blind side, and brought in free agent guard Orlando Franklin. Five different guys snapped the ball to Rivers last year, including Chris Watt, who heads into camp as the starter after getting valuable experience as a rookie.

Telesco spent heavily to move up just two spots in the first round of the draft to take Wisconsin running back Melvin Gordon, who led college football with an astounding 2,587 rushing yards in 2014. Gordon will replace Ryan Mathews, whose five years in San Diego included too few Pro Bowl appearances and too many injuries and fumbles. The slashing Gordon is expected to help take the pressure off Rivers, who had a second strong season since McCoy arrived as coach.

The Chargers should be in great shape at running back, if they can stay healthy. Branden Oliver returns after stepping in as a rookie to fill in while Mathews was injured. He ended up leading the Chargers with 582 yards and three touchdowns. Third-down back Danny Woodhead returns after missing much of last season with a leg injury. In 2013, his first season with the Chargers, he rushed for 429 yards and caught 76 passes for 605 yards.

Rivers' top targets — Antonio Gates, Keenan Allen and Malcom Floyd — will be supplemented by the addition of receiver/returner Jacoby Jones and Stevie Johnson. Gates, entering his 13th season, caught 69 passes and scored 12 touchdowns (one off his career high) last season.

DEFENSE The Chargers have to get more production out of their defensive line, pass rush and, specifically, inside linebacker Donald Butler. The Chargers had only 26 sacks last year, one of the weakest efforts in the NFL. At the very least, the two guys who led the team are back, defensive end Corey Liuget (4.5) and outside linebacker Melvin Ingram (4.0). Still, the Chargers have to come up with more pressure against opposing quarterbacks. They also need to get Butler back to his hard-hitting ways after he practically disappeared once he signed a long-term contract. Butler did finish third on the team with 73 tackles, but he didn't play with the same impact he had in previous years.

There are some bright spots. Liuget had a breakout season, and the Chargers will look for even bigger things from the former first-round draft pick. He had some impact plays — he recovered two fumbles, one for a touchdown in a comeback win at San Francisco, and forced two more, including one on a strip-sack that linebacker Andrew Gachkar returned for a touchdown against the Rams. Inside linebacker Manti Te'o continues to develop and had a solid second season. He finally had his first big impact play when he intercepted a pass — off Tom Brady, no less. The Chargers look for him to continue to develop, particularly in pass coverage.

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

VOTE FOR PHILIP Philip Rivers' teammates would have nothing of the pre-draft rumors that the QB would be traded. "We definitely like having him as our quarterback. As far as I know he's still on our team, right?" running back Danny Woodhead said with a laugh. "He's a leader — it's what he does. He's one of the best in the league at his position, and we're very fortunate to have him on the field on Sundays ... He's a great player." Added left tackle King Dunlap: "What he brings, not a lot of guys have."

NON-PLUSSED The Chargers are doing a good job of blocking out talk about the possibility that the franchise could move to Los Angeles. "I'm a day-by-day guy, I'm an in-the-present guy," Woodhead says. "I'm trying to focus on getting ready for 2015. If you've been in this business long enough, you know that tomorrow's not guaranteed."

NO MESSAGE Given the rumors of that impending move to Los Angeles, social media was quick to react when a photo surfaced of Rivers wearing a Los Angeles Clippers cap during a playoff game. Turns out Rivers is just a friend and fan of Clippers head coach Doc Rivers (no relation).

CINCO DE CENTERS While every team has injury issues, things got more than a little ridiculous at the center position for the Chargers, who were forced to use five different starters there last year. Entering his last season, veteran Nick Hardwick was forced out of the opener with a season-ending neck stinger. Rich Ohrnberger started seven of the next nine games before he went on injured reserve with a back injury. Doug Legursky started two games before going on IR with a knee injury. Rookie Chris Watt started five games before getting knocked out with a calf injury, and Trevor Robinson started the season finale. Watt is the incumbent starter, and Robinson is listed as his backup.

RUNNING RECORD Former Chargers star LaDainian Tomlinson held the major-college football single-game rushing record of 406 yards from 1999, when he was at TCU, until Nov. 15, when Wisconsin Badger (and subsequent San Diego draft pick) Melvin Gordon broke his mark with 408 yards in just three quarters against Nebraska. Gordon held on to the record for only one week, because Oklahoma's Samaje Perine went off for 427 yards against Kansas the following Saturday.

ERIC WEDDLE, S

Weddle stayed away from early offseason workouts, feeling disrespected because the team hasn't offered a contract extension. He's still growing his beard, vowing not to shave until the Chargers have won the Super Bowl. He will team with third-year pro Jahleel Addae, who started five games in 2014, and Jimmy Wilson. A San Diego native who went to Point Loma High School, Wilson signed with the Chargers as a free agent after spending his first four NFL seasons with Miami.

SPECIALISTS The Chargers remain in good hands in this department with kicker Nick Novak and punter Mike Scifres, and they've added Jones to the mix as a kick returner. Eddie Royal left as a free agent, leaving Allen to handle punt returns. Novak had another strong season, making 22-of-26 field-goal attempts (84.6 percent). He ranks second in franchise history with an 86.3 field-goal percentage. His franchise-record streak of 32 consecutive field goals came to an end on Nov. 16 against Oakland when he missed from 48 yards, his first miss in just more than a year. However, he bounced back and hit a season-long 52 yarder. In a home game against New England on Dec. 7, Novak had to fill in as the team's punter for the first time in his career after Scifres suffered a shoulder injury. Novak hadn't punted in a game since high school, but he averaged 40 yards on six attempts with a long of 51 and one punt inside the 20. It was the first time since 2003 that someone other than Scifres had punted for the Bolts. San Diego could use a little more juice in the return game, and Jones, who has 10 career special teams touchdowns including a memorable 108-yard kickoff return in Super Bowl XLVII, could provide it.

FINAL ANALYSIS Rivers and the Chargers know exactly where they have to improve — in games against AFC West foes. The Chargers were swept by both the Denver Broncos and Kansas City Chiefs last year, beating only the lowly Oakland Raiders in the division. A lackluster effort at Kansas City in the finale, against backup quarterback Chase Daniel, cost the Chargers a playoff spot and had people wondering about their focus and motivation. A return to the playoffs isn't out of the question, especially with the addition of Gordon, but another third-place finish is just as likely.

It was worth it to general manager Tom Telesco to pay a big price to move up two spots to take Melvin Gordon with the 15th pick overall. "We needed impact players and we got an impact player," Telesco said. NFL Hall of Famer Marshall Faulk offered his stamp of approval: "His work ethic is impeccable," said Faulk, who played at San Diego State. "And you will love what you see in him when you watch him play football. His passion and desire to be one of the greats — if not the greatest — is going to show immediately when you watch him play." Gordon will be counted on to help take the pressure off Philip Rivers. Telesco used his remaining four picks to add defensive depth. Denzel Perryman is considered a "thumper," which the Chargers desperately need at linebacker. Craig Mager is considered a project, but the Chargers like his toughness. Kyle Emanuel won the Buck Buchanan Award, given to the top defensive player in the FCS ranks. He won four national titles while at North Dakota State. Darius Philon, an early entrant, played a key role on the underrated Arkansas defense last season. He isn't likely to play much as a rookie but could develop into a late-round steal.

SCOUTING THE CHARGERS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP SAN DIEGO "Word got out this spring that quarterback Philip Rivers would play out his contract and was not interested in going to L.A., if in fact, the Chargers were on the move. Rumors swirled before the draft that San Diego would trade him to the Titans in exchange for the chance to pick Marcus Mariota at No. 2. ... Running back Ryan Mathews signed with the Eagles, so the Chargers moved up two spots in the draft for Melvin Gordon, who should help their running game. ... The offensive line has been surprisingly effective over the past two years, especially left tackle King Dunlap. He has far surpassed most scouts' expectations. ... Tight end Antonio Gates just keeps going but has indicated that 2015 will be his last season. ... Keenan Allen and Malcom Floyd give them a set of legitimate receivers. ... Most of the success of a 3-4 defense stems from the pass rush, and the Chargers were 29th in sacks with 26 last year. ... They are banking on Melvin Ingram and Jerry Attaochu to stay healthy and produce better results in 2015. ... The Chargers are smallish in the back end, but Jason Verrett is a nifty cover man who has to demonstrate that he can survive the rigors of the NFL. ... San Diego has won between seven and nine games for five straight seasons, and nothing seems to indicate that 2015 will be any different."

2015 NFC PREDICTIONS

NFC EAST

1. Dallas Cowboys
They can go as far as Tony Romo's back allows.

2. Philadelphia Eagles
Chip Kelly betting on Sam Bradford staying healthy.

3. New York Giants
Another losing season would almost surely end the Coughlin Era.

4. Washington Redskins
No longer just looking for the quick fix.

NFC NORTH

1. Green Bay Packers
Insist they won't use blowing the NFC title game as motivation.

2. Detroit Lions
Returned to playoffs, but big pieces now lost from dominant defense.

3. Minnesota Vikings
Adrian Peterson returns, but Teddy Bridgewater must keep developing.

4. Chicago Bears
John Fox has a tall task to turn Bears around.

NFC SOUTH

1. New Orleans Saints
Defense should get better, but how much does Drew Brees have left?

2. Carolina Panthers
Can they make it three division titles in a row?

3. Atlanta Falcons
New coach Dan Quinn must work magic with defense.

4. Tampa Bay Buccaneers
Got their man in Jameis Winston. Can he deliver?

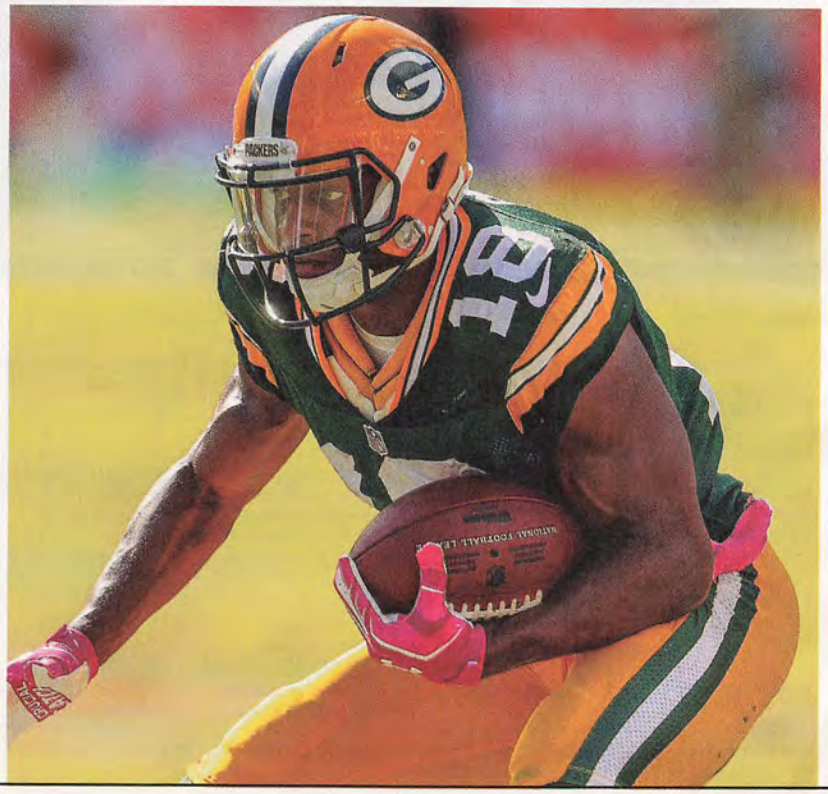
NFC WEST

1. Seattle Seahawks
Jimmy Graham is a weapon unlike any Russell Wilson has had in Seattle.

2. Arizona Cardinals
Dangerous when Carson Palmer is healthy.

3. St. Louis Rams
Defense is ready; can the offense catch up?

4. San Francisco 49ers
Can't blame Jim Harbaugh anymore if they keep falling.



Cobb: Tom DiPace; Campbell: Tim Umphrey

NFC COORDINATOR CAROUSEL

ARIZONA CARDINALS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Todd Bowles New: James Bettcher
Bettcher was promoted to defensive coordinator after Bowles left to become the Jets head coach. He had served under Bowles as the Cardinals outside linebackers coach the past two seasons.

ATLANTA FALCONS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Mike Nolan New: Richard Smith
This marks Smith's third stint as a defensive coordinator. He also has served in this capacity for both the Dolphins (2005) and Texans (2006-08).

ATLANTA FALCONS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Dirk Koetter New: Kyle Shanahan
Shanahan resigned from his position with the Browns last year due to an apparent disagreement over Johnny Manziel's NFL readiness. That won't be an issue with two-time Pro Bowler Matt Ryan entrenched under center for the Falcons. Prior to the Browns, Shanahan served as the offensive coordinator for the Redskins (2010-13) and Texans (2008-09).

CHICAGO BEARS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Mel Tucker New: Vic Fangio
A casualty of the Jim Harbaugh break-up in San Francisco, Fangio will now turn his attention to fixing one of the NFL's worst defenses over the past two seasons. In each of Fangio's four seasons with the 49ers, his defense ranked among the top 10 in both yards and points allowed, and only one of those finishes (2014, scoring defense, 10th) was outside of the top five.

CHICAGO BEARS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Aaron Kromer New: Adam Gase
Gase has been reunited with John Fox in Chicago after serving as the Broncos' offensive coordinator the past two seasons. After forming a prolific partnership with Peyton Manning, Gase will try to replicate some of that same success with the embattled Jay Cutler.

GREEN BAY PACKERS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Tom Clements New: Edgar Bennett
Since he was hired in 2006, head coach Mike McCarthy had called the plays for the Packers' productive offense. That will change this season following the promotion of Clements to associate head coach (offense). To replace Clements, McCarthy turned to Bennett, who has been Green Bay's wide receivers coach since 2011.

NEW YORK GIANTS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Perry Fewell New: Steve Spagnuolo
Fewell was fired after five seasons, opening the door for Spagnuolo's return after serving as the Giants' defensive coordinator from 2007-08. His first season on Tom Coughlin's staff culminated with a victory over previously undefeated New England, the No. 1 scoring team in NFL history at that time, in Super Bowl XLII.

ST. LOUIS RAMS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Brian Schottenheimer New: Frank Cignetti Jr.
Following Schottenheimer's decision to join Mark Richt's staff at Georgia, Rams head coach Jeff Fisher promoted Cignetti, his quarterbacks coach the past three seasons. Cignetti will handle play calling, while working closely with Rob Boras, associate head coach (offense), who will continue to coach tight ends and also be heavily involved with the run game.

SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Vic Fangio New: Eric Mangini
The 49ers' tight ends coach the past two seasons, Mangini was tabbed to oversee the defense by new head coach Jim Tomsula. Mangini, the former head coach of the Jets (2006-08) and Browns (2009-10), last served as a defensive coordinator for the Patriots in 2005.

SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Greg Roman New: Geep Chryst
The team's quarterbacks coach the past four seasons, Chryst was elevated to offensive coordinator by new head coach Jim Tomsula. Chryst previously served as the Chargers' offensive coordinator from 1999-2000. He's the brother of Wisconsin head coach Paul Chryst.

SEATTLE SEAHAWKS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Dan Quinn New: Kris Richard
The Seahawks' defensive backs coach the past three seasons, Richard will expand his oversight beyond the "Legion of Boom" this season. A former third-round pick of the Seahawks in the 2002 draft, Richard has ties to head coach Pete Carroll that go back to his senior season at USC.

TAMPA BAY BUCCANEERS
Offensive Coordinator
Old: Jeff Tedford/Marcus Arroyo (interim) New: Dirk Koetter
Atlanta's offensive coordinator the past three seasons, Koetter will have to make the transition from having Pro Bowler Matt Ryan as his quarterback to No. 1 overall pick Jameis Winston. A head coach at Boise State and Arizona State, Koetter first came to the NFL as the Jaguars' offensive coordinator from 2007-11.

WASHINGTON REDSKINS
Defensive Coordinator
Old: Jim Haslett New: Joe Barry
Barry comes to the Redskins after serving as the Chargers' linebackers coach the past four seasons. This is Barry's second go-round as a defensive coordinator, after overseeing the Lions' defense from 2007-08.

1 NFC EAST FORECAST

Twenty years have passed since the Cowboys last raised the Vince Lombardi Trophy. They have had only nine winning seasons since, with a 158–146 regular-season record and a 3–8 postseason mark. Yet, Jerry Jones has never lost faith.

This year begins no differently, although the Cowboys owner actually has reason to believe. The team has turned the momentum from last season into real, live Super Bowl hopes. The Cowboys saw a healthy Tony Romo for the first time in three offseasons. They welcome back the same offensive and defensive coordinators for the first time in four years. The league's best offensive line returns intact. They helped their defense with some offseason additions. "I like the future of this team," Jones says.

There's nothing like the present, though.

OFFENSE The Cowboys believe as long as they have Romo, they have a chance. Romo underwent two back surgeries in two years, and last season he missed a game with two fractures in his transverse process. But he entered the offseason fully healed. Despite throwing for only 3,705 yards, Romo had one of the best seasons of his career with a 12–3 record, 34 touchdowns and nine interceptions. He led the league in completion percentage (69.9), yards per attempt (8.5), passer rating (113.2) and game-winning drives (five), putting his name in the MVP conversation. The Cowboys insist that Romo, 35, has a few good years left. They sought to upgrade their backup quarterback situation, but it appears Brandon Weeden will once again be the No. 2 signal caller..

The Cowboys took pressure off Romo last season by running the ball 508 times (vs. 506 pass plays). They'll continue that approach in 2015, even though the league's leading rusher, DeMarco Murray, left for Philadelphia in free agency. The only change likely comes in how many carries the rushing leader gets. Running back-by-committee appears likely with Joseph Randle, Darren McFadden, Lance Dunbar and Ryan Williams competing for roster spots, playing time and carries. Randle showed signs last season as Murray's primary backup, averaging 6.7 yards per carry, but he had only 51 attempts. McFadden, the No. 4 overall pick in 2008, gets a new start with a new team after seven injury-plagued seasons in Oakland. He played a full 16-game season for the first time in his career in 2014.

Jason Witten, 33, made his 10th Pro Bowl in 2014. Now in his 13th season, he shows no signs of slowing down. Witten remains Romo's security blanket, and the tight end ranked second on the team in catches (64) and receiving yards (703) last season.

Dez Bryant became one of the top receivers in the NFL last season, earning All-Pro honors with 88 catches for 1,320 yards and 16 touchdowns. Terrance Williams had stretches where he disappeared, but he averaged 16.8 yards per catch and caught eight touchdowns. Romo trusted Cole Beasley as much as Bryant on third down, and Beasley won the job as the third receiver and a new payday at the end of the season.

Having used three first-round picks on offensive linemen since 2011, the Cowboys have built arguably the league's best line. Zack Martin, who had never played guard until the Cowboys moved him there after drafting him 16th overall last year, earned Pro Bowl honors as a rookie. He was joined by former first-rounders Travis Frederick (center) and Tyron Smith (left tackle) in the all-star game. The Cowboys kept their line intact by re-signing right tackle Doug Free to a three-year, $15 million deal and left guard Ron Leary to a one-year, $585,000 deal. They drafted Chaz Green in the third round to replace swing tackle Jermey Parnell and signed La'el Collins as a free agent after the projected first-rounder went undrafted due to some legal issues.

DEFENSE The Cowboys' biggest offseason move was the signing of defensive end Greg Hardy. Dallas had only 28 sacks last season; Hardy had double-digit sacks in 2012 and '13 but played only one game last season before going on the commissioner's exempt list. He will serve an NFL-mandated 10-game suspension, which is why the Cowboys drafted talented pass-rusher Randy Gregory in the second round. Demarcus Lawrence, who missed nine games with a broken foot as a rookie last season, will start at left end. Jeremy Mincey, Jack Crawford and Ben Gardner, who spent his rookie season on injured reserve, will compete for playing time in the team's rotation. The Cowboys moved Tyrone Crawford from defensive end to the three-technique last season and were happy with the results. He had three sacks and was solid against the run. Nick Hayden re-signed to play the nose. Terrell McClain also will see playing time in the defensive tackle rotation.

Sean Lee has missed 34 games in his five-year career, including all 16 games last season

NEW ERA

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

DEZ'S FUTURE The Cowboys have loosened the reins on star receiver Dez Bryant. The team helped with Bryant's transition into the NFL, providing him with a list of guidelines and an overseer. But Bryant severed ties with former business associates, including advisor David Wells, after changing agents at midseason. The Cowboys and Bryant's reps, Jay-Z's Roc Nation, remain far apart in their contract negotiations. Dallas franchised Bryant, who, in return, is skipping the team's voluntary offseason workouts.

HARDY'S SUSPENSION The league suspended defensive end Greg Hardy for 10 games for conduct detrimental to the game. The NFLPA filed an appeal, seeking to reduce the suspension. Commissioner Roger Goodell said his staff met with Hardy twice during an extensive two-month investigation. The league determined Hardy used physical force against his ex-girlfriend, Nicole Holder, in at least four instances. Hardy made $13.1 million last year with the Carolina Panthers, playing only one game before being placed on the commissioner's exempt list. He signed with the Cowboys as a free agent.

CLAIBORNE'S FUTURE The Cowboys declined to pick up the fifth-year option on Morris Claiborne's contract. The cornerback, the sixth overall pick in the 2012 draft, had been in line for a base salary of $11 million in 2016 if the Cowboys had exercised the option year. The oft-injured Claiborne hopes to return during training camp after tearing the patellar tendon in his left knee last season. He has played only 29 games and intercepted only three passes.

KINGS OF THE EAST The Cowboys added an 18th NFC East title last season, most of any team in the division. The Eagles have won nine division titles and the Giants and the Redskins eight each. The St. Louis/Arizona Cardinals won two NFC East titles before changing divisions.

WINNER, WINNER Jason Garrett should become the second-winningest coach in team history this season. He has 41 victories, trailing only Jimmy Johnson (44) and Tom Landry (250). Garrett has a .569 winning percentage (41–31).

FOURTH-QUARTER RATING Tony Romo's 102.0 passer rating in the fourth quarter ranks as the second-highest in NFL history, trailing only Aaron Rodgers (102.2). Next on the list are Steve Young (97.9), Kurt Warner (91.9) and Tom Brady (91.5).

after tearing the ACL in his left knee on the first day of OTAs. Lee, who has two 100-tackle seasons and 11 career interceptions, will move from middle linebacker to the weak side, the most important linebacker position in the Tampa 2. The Cowboys re-signed Rolando McClain to man the middle, and Anthony Hitchens, who started at all three linebacker positions among 11 starts as a rookie, leads the candidates at strong-side linebacker.

JASON WITTEN, TE

The Cowboys tried to shore up their cornerback position before the 2012 season when they signed Brandon Carr and traded up in the draft to select Morris Claiborne. But Carr hasn't lived up to the contract, and the Cowboys are expected to ask him to take a pay cut, which could lead to his release. Claiborne missed 12 games last season with a ruptured patellar tendon in his left knee. Even when healthy, Claiborne has done nothing to give the Cowboys an indication that he ever will develop into a shutdown corner. Orlando Scandrick has become the team's most reliable player at the position, but he did not participate in voluntary offseason workouts while seeking a raise. The Cowboys drafted Byron Jones with their first-round pick and expect him to play a big role as a rookie. Starting safeties J.J. Wilcox and Barry Church rarely make game-changing plays but rarely give up big plays and are sure tacklers.

SPECIALISTS Dan Bailey ranks as the second-most accurate placekicker in NFL history, converting 89.8 percent of his career kicks. He has nine game-winning kicks, including five in overtime, in his career. Dallas re-signed punter Chris Jones, who had a 39.8 net average last season, though Australian Tom Hornsey will compete for the job. The Cowboys will go into training camp looking for return specialists to replace Dwayne Harris.

FINAL ANALYSIS Jason Garrett kept his job with an unexpected playoff run last season; he'll be expected to produce even more this season. The Cowboys kept defensive coordinator Rod Marinelli and offensive play-caller Scott Linehan. The addition of Hardy should help the pass rush, but a big question remains about how the Cowboys will replace Murray. They should contend for the division title, but the NFC title still might be a few more good players away.

The Cowboys were intent on helping a defense that ranked 19th overall last season and had only 28 sacks. It marked the first time in their draft history that they came out of a draft without a skill-position player. Five of eight picks, including their top two choices, were defensive players. With the uncertainty at the corner position, Dallas used the No. 27 overall choice on Byron Jones. He could end up seeing significant playing time with Morris Claiborne returning from serious knee surgery combined with the unresolved contract statuses of starters Brandon Carr and Orlando Scandrick. Randy Gregory could prove to be a second-round steal, falling to the Cowboys after testing positive for marijuana at the NFL Scouting Combine in February. Chaz Green becomes the swing tackle, replacing Jermey Parnell, who left in free agency, and Damien Wilson gets a shot at a position where the Cowboys have had an inordinate number of injuries the past few seasons.

SCOUTING THE COWBOYS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP DALLAS "The pick of Zack Martin in last year's first round over Johnny Manziel showed a discipline and direction uncommon to the Cowboys since the Jimmy Johnson and Bill Parcells tenures. They wisely added to their offensive line, which helped the run game, protected Tony Romo better and gave some cover to their suspect defense. ... DeMarco Murray hit free agency, and again, Jerry Jones demonstrated new-found restraint and did not chase him beyond the predetermined budget. ... Tight end Jason Witten is one of the most competitive, consistent performers in the league. All he does is block, catch passes and lead by example. ... Terrance Williams flies under the radar, but he had 37 catches last year, eight of which went for scores, and Cole Beasley re-upped as their slot receiver, too, so they are set out wide. ... Jason Garrett and offensive coordinator Scott Linehan must stay balanced and lean on their run game to set up for success on third downs, rather than wanting to throw the football all over the lot. ... Defensive tackle Henry Melton took his five sacks to Tampa Bay as a free agent. ... The secondary needed a boost at cornerback because Brandon Carr has not produced big plays and Orlando Scandrick is better as a nickel than full-time starter, so they added UConn corner Byron Jones as their No. 1 choice."

There's only so much that even the most patient bosses can take, and it appears that Giants ownership is finally reaching its limit. Last season was a disaster. They've now suffered back-to-back losing seasons for the first time under Tom Coughlin. In the three years since they won Super Bowl XLVI, they haven't made the playoffs once.

That is the failure that hovers over the Giants' 2015 season. And any thought that John Mara still has patience with Coughlin and GM Jerry Reese was erased with his last answer in his season-ending press conference. He was asked if 2015 would be a "win or else proposition" for many of his employees.

"I don't think that's an unfair statement," Mara said.

And so it begins. It's either the end of the Coughlin era, or the Giants' long-awaited return to prominence. And there seems to be very little room in between.

OFFENSE Considering all the questions hovering over Eli Manning heading into last season, his 2014 was remarkable. Last summer, he was answering questions about his injured ankle, the 27 interceptions he threw the year before, and his ability to learn a new offense for the first time in his career. In his 11th season, Manning threw for 4,410 yards and 30 touchdowns and had career high 63.1 completion percentage. His answer was one of his finest statistical seasons as he led the Giants' offense back into the top 10.

This year they're aiming higher — much higher — because they believe they have an offensive arsenal that compares to any team in the league. Start with the incomparable Odell Beckham Jr., the receiver who became an overnight superstar as a rookie. In 12 games he had what would've been a great season for most receivers in 16 games (91-1,305-12), and he did it despite being the Giants' only viable option at times.

This season, Beckham expects to be flanked by former Pro Bowl receiver Victor Cruz, whom the Giants hope will make a full recovery from the knee injury suffered last season. And the inconsistent but dangerous Rueben Randle will be better off as the No. 3. Randle had a career-high 938 receiving yards, but his yards per catch dipped from 14.9 to 13.2, and he scored only three touchdowns. Manning also will now have a running back to throw to out of the backfield — ex-Patriot Shane Vereen — which is supposed to be a very key component in offensive coordinator Ben McAdoo's plan. Vereen caught 52 passes last year for New England.

The key to all this, though, is the offensive line, which could give the running game a boost and give Manning more time to find his targets. They believe they'll be better because guard Geoff Schwartz, last year's big free agent, will be back after an injury-plagued season. They also drafted big Ereck Flowers, who should take over at right tackle, which would allow Justin Pugh to move inside to guard.

The Giants have the potential to have their best line — and best offense — since their Super Bowl team.

DEFENSE It's Back to the Future for the Giants after yet another disastrous defensive performance last season under now-ex-defensive coordinator Perry Fewell. There was no doubt whom Coughlin was going to tab as Fewell's replacement — the popular Steve Spagnuolo, who was the Giants' defensive coordinator in 2007 and 2008 and was the architect of the plan that beat the undefeated Patriots in Super Bowl XLII.

Of course, "Spags" had a loaded team back then that included Hall of Fame defensive end Michael Strahan and a stable of young, talented pass rushers. This time around his cupboard is much more bare. The Giants' entire pass rush hinges on defensive end Jason Pierre-Paul, who got the "franchise" tag this offseason. He had a brief resurgence at the end of last season, but it could've been the by-product of playing some bad teams.

Spagnuolo will bring an aggressive, attacking scheme that his players will love. He will find ways to utilize promising defensive end Damontre Moore, who is a pass-rush specialist but struggles against the run. He will bring corners and safeties on frequent blitzes, which will help a secondary that has some big question marks (corners Prince Amukamara and Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie are coming off injury-plagued seasons, and with Antrel Rolle gone the safety spot looks like a big, black hole).

The key to making that work, though, is the presence of one premier pass rusher to get most of the offense's attention, and to shrug off that attention and still make his presence felt. Pierre-Paul used to be able to do that. And the Giants' defense could be very good if he's the old "JPP" again.

NEW ERA

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

TORN BETWEEN TWO STORIES Odell Beckham Jr. added to his own legend when, after the Pro Bowl, he revealed that he had played his remarkable rookie season with two torn hamstrings — one that was fully torn. It was an incredible tale of toughness and perseverance, assuming it was true. "I don't know about that," GM Jerry Reese says. "I think he was trying to be a hero. You can't run fast like that with two torn hamstrings."

BENDING IT LIKE ... During and after his wild rookie season, Beckham has gotten praise and invitations from many A-list athletes, including LeBron James, who invited him to dinner. But his favorite meeting was with soccer star David Beckham, his childhood idol, and not just because they share a last name. Odell Beckham was once a pretty good soccer player, too. So what did Beckham tell Beckham? "He just told me, 'You have to keep the legacy going,'" Odell says. "'Keep up the family name.'"

ONLY TWO REMAINING Outside of the front office and the coaching staff, there are few ties left to the Giants' beloved Super Bowl XLII champions. With the retirement of offensive lineman Chris Snee last summer and the release of defensive end Mathias Kiwanuka, the last two are QB Eli Manning and long-snapper Zak DeOssie, both of whom could be around for a while.

ALL IN THE FAMILY Snee may have retired due to elbow and hip injuries, but he didn't stray far from the Giants. The former offensive lineman, and still-son-in-law to Tom Coughlin, spent the offseason evaluating film of some of the offensive linemen the Giants were considering in the draft. His favorite was Brandon Scherff, who went fifth to the Redskins. He did a lot of film work on Ereck Flowers, the Giants' first-round pick.

MONEY IN THE BANKS When the Giants drafted an offensive lineman in Round 1 they made it 31 straight drafts since they last took a linebacker in the first round. The last time it happened? When they took Carl Banks in 1984.

MOVIN' ON UP When running back Shane Vereen left the reigning Super Bowl champion Patriots to join the Giants, he heaped praise on his former employer. But his comment that received the most attention, understandably, was this one, explaining his decision to sign with the Giants: "This is not a step down," he said. "If anything, it's a step up."

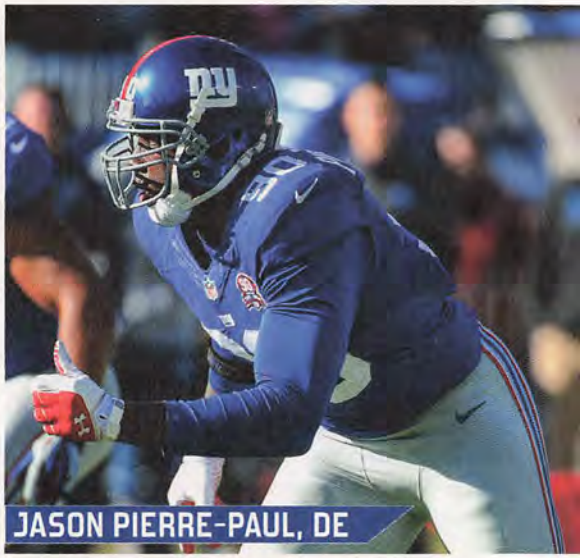
SPECIALISTS The Giants haven't had to worry about their kicker (Josh Brown) or punter (Steve Weatherford) the last few years. Brown is as accurate as any kicker in the league, and Weatherford — who battled through painful torn ligaments in his ankle last season — is a coach's dream, at least when he's healthy. The coverage teams on kicks and punts were even improved last season.

It's the Giants' return game that's been dreadful, which is why they over-spent on Dwayne Harris, a virtually unknown Cowboys receiver/returner. The hope is that he'll bring the speed and explosiveness they've been missing in their return game since they had a healthy Domenik Hixon. It also allows them to keep Beckham off of special teams, because until Harris arrived, Beckham was looking like their only option.



JASON PIERRE-PAUL, DE

Harris — who also could be a terrific gunner on punt coverage teams — will still need solid play in front of him, and the Giants think they've found a small army of good special teamers both in free agency and in recent draft classes. It didn't go unnoticed that some of their free-agent additions, such as linebackers Jonathan Casillas and JT Thomas, are good special teamers too. The Giants' beleaguered unit needs as much help as it can get.

FINAL ANALYSIS The Giants would never use injuries as an excuse, but how can you not factor that in when thinking about how much better they'll be this year? They had injuries along their offensive and defensive lines, lost their previous No. 1 receiver (Cruz), their middle linebacker (Jon Beason), their top corner (Amukamara), their nickel corner (Walt Thurmond) and, for a time, their No. 1 running back (Rashad Jennings). No wonder the Giants finished 6–10.

But here's the thing: They still had a top-10 offense, and there were at least four winnable games where a little luck and health might have made a difference.

That's why they're primed for a bounce-back year. They are essentially getting their 2014 free-agent class back, along with their '15 class. They are adding help to free the unstoppable Beckham from double-teams. They've added a better defensive coordinator who'll bring in a more successful scheme. Barring another onslaught of injuries, this team should be much improved and remain in the hunt in the NFC East.

GIANTS IN THE DRAFT

A

RD	PLAYER	POS	HT	WT	COLLEGE
1.	Ereck Flowers	OL	6-6	329	Miami (Fla.)
2.	Landon Collins	S	6-0	228	Alabama
3.	Owamagbe Odighizuwa	DE	6-3	267	UCLA
5.	Mykkele Thompson	S	6-2	191	Texas
6.	Geremy Davis	WR	6-2	216	Connecticut
7.	Bobby Hart	OL	6-5	329	Florida State

The Giants' first three picks will absolutely get an opportunity to step in right away, which is what makes this class so good. Ereck Flowers projects as a franchise left tackle, but he probably will start on the right side. Landon Collins, the first pick in the second round, will have to be a starting safety almost by default, and Mykkele Thompson, a safety out of Texas, could earn a job too. Thompson didn't expect to be drafted, saying he didn't put up good enough numbers, but he hopes to reward the Giants' faith in him. And while Owamagbe Odighizuwa won't start, he'll be in the defensive end rotation. They all need some work. Flowers has issues with his pass-blocking technique, Collins isn't strong in coverage, and Odighizuwa needs to be stronger against the run. But since they all fill holes on the Giants' roster, they'll be thrown in right away to sink or swim. Geremy Davis, who had a productive career at UConn, could be a special teams contributor. Bobby Hart earned All-ACC honors twice at Florida State and has impressive skills.

SCOUTING THE GIANTS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP NEW YORK "After some growing pains for the entire offense, Eli Manning took off and finished with 30 touchdowns and cut his interceptions in half from 27 to 14. ... In only 12 games, Odell Beckham Jr. earned a Pro Bowl trip. He is a terrific hand-eye coordination athlete with change-of-direction skills and big speed. ... Rueben Randle doesn't get much recognition, but he chipped in 71 catches and has developed into a solid No. 3 WR. ... The biggest surprise may have been the performance of tight end Larry Donnell, who ended 2014 with 63 grabs and six touchdowns. ... The offensive line was upgraded when tackle Ereck Flowers was picked at No. 9 in the first round, so with center Weston Richburg and tackle Justin Pugh, they now have three young prospects that can be secure long-time starters. ... (New defensive coordinator) Steve Spagnuolo will find some pieces to work with in end Jason Pierre-Paul, who returned to form with 12.5 sacks, and tackle Johnathan Hankins, plus outside linebacker Devon Kennard. ... After Antrel Rolle signed in Chicago, the safety position was the most vacant spot on the depth chart until the team traded up to get Landon Collins in the second round. ... No one in the NFC East is invincible, so if the Giants can stay healthy and improve their turnover margin again, they can be in the mix with Dallas and Philadelphia."

Chip Kelly's short tenure as Philadelphia's coach has been anything but dull. It's too early to tell if the many changes Kelly has made will pay off in postseason success, but there can be no denying the interest the team has created. In a town starving for good news in the light of the horrible play of the Phillies, Sixers and Flyers, the Eagles' offseason personnel binge was a welcome diversion from the carnage afflicting the city's other professional teams.

Now in his third year with the Birds, Kelly is completely in charge of the team on and off the field. The team is all his, and if some have been turned off by the decisions he's made, Kelly frankly doesn't care. He has a plan, and as one of the rare NFL coaches who also handles the personnel end of the business, he is in a unique position to carry it out. After two straight seasons of 10 wins — but no playoff success — the Philadelphia community is expecting more in 2015. It's up to Kelly to prove that he knows what he's doing.

OFFENSE The star of the Eagles' offense is the scheme, which features a high-speed, run-first spread attack designed to leave opponents panting and confused. It worked well last year, since Philadelphia was fifth in the league in total offense, third in points per game and ninth in rushing. But thanks to a few significant offseason moves, there is no guarantee the Eagles will be able to replicate that success. Further, the success that top defenses — Seattle, San Francisco, Indianapolis included — had against Philadelphia last year may have created a blueprint for 2015 opponents.

The biggest change is at running back, where LeSean McCoy is off to Buffalo after rushing for 2,926 yards the past two seasons. By the end of last year, there were whispers that Kelly wasn't happy with his featured back, who at times waited for a hole to emerge, rather than sticking his foot in the ground and powering straight ahead. That's why the Eagles signed DeMarco Murray, who rushed for 1,845 yards and 13 scores — both tops in the league — last year for Dallas. Murray is more of a plant-and-cut guy, and Kelly likes that. He won't get 392 carries, though, like he did last year, thanks to the arrival of Ryan Mathews from San Diego and the return of versatile Darren Sproles, although Mathews missed a big part of 2014 with a foot injury.

If Murray plays like he did last year, it will make life easy for new quarterback Sam Bradford, whom the team acquired in a trade with St. Louis. Although there were rumors the Birds were going to trade the team for Marcus Mariota, no deal happened, and Bradford is under center, so long as he doesn't get injured again. Now on his third ACL, Bradford has played a total of seven games the past two seasons. If healthy, he can be accurate and productive, although he has limited potential to run from the zone read. Inconsistent Mark Sanchez will back him up.

For the second straight year, the Eagles lost a top-shelf receiver. After 2013, DeSean Jackson departed. Now, they will do without Jeremy Maclin (85 catches, 10 TDs), who signed with Kansas City. His loss hurts a receiving corps that now needs big contributions from second-year man Jordan Matthews, who has potential but isn't a No. 1-type, disappointing Riley Cooper, veteran pick-up Miles Austin and rookie Nelson Agholor of USC. Agholor, the team's first-round draft pick, is a Maclin clone who has good quickness and ball skills but won't force opponents to double-team him. Tight end Brent Celek is a warrior, but he saw his production drop last year, so it's time for third-year man Zach Ertz to develop into a major contributor.

The Eagles didn't address the offensive line in the draft, but that's not the worst thing in the world. Left tackle Jason Peters is still one of the best around, and center Jason Kelce is an All-Pro candidate. Right tackle Lane Johnson is solid but not yet a standout, and though guard Evan Mathis wanted to be traded during the offseason, he is back for his fifth season with the team.

DEFENSE Kelly's offensive philosophy puts tremendous stress on the defense, and last year that was not a good thing. The Eagles finished 28th in the league in total D, tied for 22nd in points allowed and 31st against the pass. There have been some big changes made on the back end, but there remains no guarantee the unit can hold up against better opposition.

The trade for McCoy netted inside linebacker Kiko Alonso, who had 87 solo tackles and four interceptions in 2013 but missed all of last year with a torn ACL. If healthy, he is a

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

MAXIMUM LEADER Although Chip Kelly and owner Jeffrey Lurie insist that the coach did not demand the demotion of former GM Howie Roseman to team capologist, the coach is now completely in charge of the Eagles' personnel and flexed his authority during the offseason with a variety of moves that continue to change the team's identity. While Roseman received a raise, he lost his influence on matters involving the roster and is now playing a supporting role while Kelly puts together a team that fits his preferences.

HOSPITAL WARD If there's one overriding theme among the new faces, it's the hope that most of them are fast healers. Quarterback Sam Bradford (ACL), linebacker Kiko Alonso (ACL), running back Ryan Mathews (foot) and cornerback Walter Thurmond (pectoral) all come to town in the midst of rehabbing major injuries.

NO DEAL The three-plus months leading up to the 2015 NFL Draft were basically a pep rally for the Eagles to draft Marcus Mariota, the Oregon quarterback who thrived under Kelly's system. Although draft-day rumors had the Eagles trading multiple picks and players to Tennessee for the second overall pick, nothing materialized, and Philadelphia was left with Sam Bradford as its starting quarterback.

UNHAPPY CAMPERS When the Eagles convened for voluntary workouts in April, two 2014 starters weren't there and were being shopped by the team. Linebacker Mychal Kendricks and guard Evan Mathis were both unhappy with their contract situations — each is heading into the last year of a deal — and requested to be shipped to a team that would give them an extension. The draft came and went, and both remained on the roster, a condition most expect to continue throughout the season.

MURRAY CHRISTMAS The Eagles got a late holiday present when DeMarco Murray signed a free-agent deal with the team. Philadelphia thought it had Frank Gore as its replacement for LeSean McCoy, but he went to Indianapolis instead, clearing a path for Murray. The NFL's reigning rushing leader had a huge 2014 season and was a big reason the Cowboys won the NFC East and a playoff game. He will get plenty of work in the Eagles' system and try to replicate his previous success.

downhill playmaker. If not, the Eagles are in trouble. The team re-upped inside man DeMeco Ryans, who tore his Achilles tendon in the eighth game of 2014 and could struggle getting back to top form. Mychal Kendricks spent the offseason upset about his contract and Alonso's arrival, but if he plays hard, he can be a difference maker.

Sack man Connor Barwin and Brandon Graham are the main outside threats in Bill Davis' 3-4, and it is up to Graham — who showed flashes last year — to play consistently. The Birds hope third-round pick Jordan Hicks can provide good depth inside, while second-year man Marcus Smith, the Eagles' first-round pick last year, is still waiting to make his first NFL tackle.

FLETCHER COX, DE

The Eagles' secondary was horrible last year, and fans welcomed the departures of Bradley Fletcher and Cary Williams. Philadelphia will use former Seattle corner Byron Maxwell on one side and hope he wasn't aided by the presence of Richard Sherman opposite him in the Emerald City. New addition Walter Thurmond could play on the other side, but he is more of a slot corner, as is holdover Brandon Boykin. By midseason, second-round pick Eric Rowe could have the job. Malcolm Jenkins is tough at free safety, but there is a hole next to him.

Up front, left end Fletcher Cox should be a Pro Bowler, while big Bennie Logan is a drain plug in the middle, and Cedric Thornton is a solid end.

SPECIALISTS The Eagles lucked into something good when they acquired Cody Parkey, who made 32-of-36 kicks last year, including 4-of-4 from 50 and beyond. Punter Donnie Jones averaged 43.8 yards per kick last year, a number that needs to improve. Agholor adds excitement to the return game, and Sproles is a threat to go the distance at all times.

FINAL ANALYSIS This is a tough team to read because there are so many variables due to injury. If Bradford is healthy, the offense should be potent, thanks to Murray, but there are big concerns at wide receiver. The secondary is better (how could it be worse?), but the Eagles still need Alonso and Ryans to make healthy returns in order to make the second line of defense potent.

The Eagles will continue to try to outscore people, and while that works against some teams, it isn't good enough against the NFC's best.

7.	Brian Mihalik	DE	6-9	295	Boston College

The Eagles addressed needs at receiver and in the defensive backfield with this draft, getting a wideout (Nelson Agholor) many believe could step right in and start. The former USC Trojan caught 104 passes as a junior in 2014, although he averaged a career-low 12.6 yards per reception. Still, the Eagles believe he could be a downfield threat to relieve the crowding at the line of scrimmage in the run game. Eric Rowe is capable of playing safety or corner, two areas of need for the team. He could start at some point this season. Jordan Hicks is a three-down inside man who may have trouble getting work anywhere but on special teams his first year. JaCorey Shepherd, who slipped in the draft due to a slow 40 time at his Pro Day, is seen by many as a sleeper and has a chance to get into the cornerback rotation. Randall Evans has good versatility and could find special teams work in 2015. At 6'9", Brian Mihalik is the tallest player Chip Kelly has ever drafted, and Kelly was impressed with his other measurables as well.

SCOUTING THE EAGLES

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP PHILADELPHIA "Sam Bradford has not been able to stay healthy, and every time he drops back beginning in OTAs, the Eagles' organization will be holding its collective breath. ... Even before the QB surprise, there was the trade of running back LeSean McCoy to Buffalo for linebacker Kiko Alonso, who missed all of 2014 with a torn ACL. Word has it that they felt McCoy was overpriced and spent too much time going east-west. ... Prior to last season, DeMarco Murray battled his own injury concerns before breaking out to lead the NFL in rushing. The expectation is that he will give Chip Kelly a more dependable north-south option as a runner, and don't forget Ryan Mathews was inked as well. ... The tight ends are very competent in Zach Ertz and Brent Celek, while USC's Nelson Agholor was added to a deficient mix of wide receivers as their first-round pick. ... Kelly's unique offense has put up terrific numbers in his first two seasons, but it certainly is a scheme that leaves the defense on the field. ... Defensive end Fletcher Cox is the real deal and scheme-versatile. ... Alonso will help DeMeco Ryans serve as a signal-caller, and both can help get Mychal Kendricks pointed in the right direction. ... The cornerback position has been retooled with the additions of Byron Maxwell (Seahawks) and Walter Thurmond (Giants) in free agency."

If 2014 showed the Washington Redskins in a state of anchorless drift — toggling between three quarterbacks, losing five games by 20 or more points and beset by the dysfunction and intrigue that have come to define the Daniel Snyder era — the 2015 version, at least in theory, will emphasize stability.

For Year 2 of Jay Gruden's tenure as head coach, the team hired a proven personnel man, in Scot McCloughan, to be its GM — and more important, gave him full autonomy on personnel moves. The Redskins also announced early in the offseason that Robert Griffin III would be the starting quarterback — ending any controversy before it could begin.

The draft brought an emphasis on size and volume, as the team amassed 10 picks and earned widespread praise in the industry for its strategy. But having won just seven games the past two seasons, and with one winning season since 2007, this probably won't be a speedy turnaround.

OFFENSE For a coach who came in with a reputation as an offensive savant, Gruden's first year steering the Redskins' offense was a disaster. The quarterback position became a revolving door of mediocrity, and the three starters — Griffin, Kirk Cousins and Colt McCoy — were sacked a staggering total of 58 times. Meanwhile the running game, behind top back Alfred Morris, regressed from the year before. Morris, in his third year, saw his carries, yards and yards per carry decline for the second straight year.

But Gruden and McCloughan ended the QB controversy early in the offseason by not only naming Griffin the starter but also picking up his costly option for 2016 — a surprising show of confidence. Then they set about building Griffin a better offensive line. They used three of their 10 draft picks on offensive linemen — including their top pick, fifth overall, on Iowa tackle Brandon Scherff, who is expected to start on the right side, opposite veteran Trent Williams. They also used a third-round pick to take running back Matt Jones out of Florida, a big, punishing runner.

With DeSean Jackson (a league-leading 20.9 yards per reception), Pierre Garçon and Andre Roberts as wideouts and Jordan Reed at tight end, the Redskins have solid skill-position targets for Griffin. The key in 2015 will be protecting him better. If he gets sacked at a rate of roughly four per game, as he did in 2014, it will be another long year.

But despite — or perhaps because of — the faith the Redskins showed in him, this will be a pivotal season for Griffin. If he has any hope of recapturing the dynamism he showed as a rookie in 2012 (if that is even possible after two injury-plagued seasons), it needs to happen in 2015. Griffin has always been big on personal mottos, from 2012's "Know Your Why" to 2013's "All In For Week One" to 2014's "This Is For Us." But after absorbing copious amounts of criticism for his penchant for oversharing with the media and on his own social-media accounts, Griffin has been determined to scale back in both regards. That may explain why, for a 2015 motto, he appears to be going with, "Talk Small and Play Big."

With Cousins and McCoy both expected to be on the roster again, Gruden probably won't wait long to pull the trigger on a quarterback change if Griffin doesn't play big.

DEFENSE The Redskins have almost totally revamped a defense that badly needed revamping. Change started at the top, when the team parted ways with embattled coordinator Jim Haslett and tabbed Chargers linebackers coach Joe Barry as his replacement. Next, the Redskins severed ties with pass rusher Brian Orakpo, who never developed into the dominant player the team envisioned when it picked him in the first round of the 2009 draft.

The leader of Barry's defense now is unquestionably outside linebacker Ryan Kerrigan, who established himself as arguably the best in the NFC East with 13.5 sacks and five forced fumbles in 2014. To build around Kerrigan, the Redskins turned both to free agency (linemen Stephen Paea and Terrance Knighton, and defensive backs Jeron Johnson and Chris Culliver) and the draft, where they used two of their top six draft picks on linebackers — Mississippi State's Preston Smith, who could become Orakpo's replacement on the edge, and tackling machine Martrell Spaight of Arkansas.

McCloughan also turned to his past in bolstering the defensive line and secondary, signing lineman Ricky Jean-Francois and trading for two-time Pro Bowl free safety Dashon Goldson, both of whom he selected in the draft at previous stops.

It is possible, when it all shakes out, that the Redskins could have six new starters on defense, a staggering number — until you realize how bad this unit was in 2014.

NEW ERA

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

IF YOU CAN'T BEAT 'EM... When the Redskins' offensive line coach position came open, the team looked to its fiercest rival for a replacement, stealing away Bill Callahan from the Cowboys, where he had helped transform their unit into one of the best in the game. Callahan has connections to both team president Bruce Allen and coach Jay Gruden.

BACK IN THE FIRST ROUND AGAIN This year's draft marked the first since 2012 that the Redskins had a pick in the first round, as their top picks in 2013 and 2014 went to the St. Louis Rams as part of the trade that brought Robert Griffin III to Washington.

FREE AGENCY AIN'T FREE The Redskins broke with recent history by staying out of the elite free-agent market, having been burned a number of times in the recent past on 32- or 34-year-old past-their-prime players who inevitably broke down or otherwise failed to contribute very much. Instead, the Redskins were judicious in free agency, making some understated but solid moves. On defense, the team signed five potential contributors, none of whom were older than 29.

THE STATS SOMETIMES LIE Among the Redskins' more curious picks of the 2015 draft, but one that could still pay off, was Evan Spencer, a wide receiver out of Ohio State who caught only 15 passes during the Buckeyes' 2014 national title season — but whom Ohio State coach Urban Meyer called the team's MVP. Spencer was the Buckeyes' special teams captain and a "selfless" player who did anything asked of him. If he makes the Redskins' roster, that will be why.

DON'T REED INTO IT Few players on the Redskins' roster have confounded management as much as tight end Jordan Reed, whose tantalizing, big-play ability makes him a favorite target anytime he is on the field — but who can't seem to stay there for long. Since his arrival as a third-round draft pick in 2013, Reed has missed 12 of the Redskins' 32 games with injuries, including five in 2014 with a lingering hamstring injury. Now, 2015 sets up as a make-or-break year for him.

SECONDARILY, JUST AWFUL The Redskins' pass defense gave up 3,990 yards and 35 touchdowns while intercepting opposing quarterbacks only seven times. That was good for an opponents' passer rating of 108.3. In other words, the Redskins turned every opposing quarterback into the equivalent of Aaron Rodgers (career passer rating: 106.0).

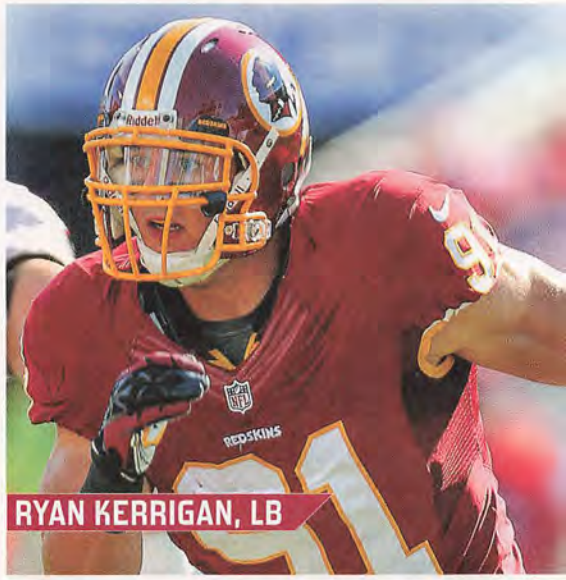
SPECIALISTS It's difficult to recall a time when the Redskins' special teams were anything other than abysmal. It's no wonder the team targeted this area in their draft haul of 10 picks, taking, among others, a potential return man (wide receiver Jamison Crowder), a core coverage man (safety Kyshoen Jarrett) and at least two other players who could have immediate impacts on special teams (linebacker Spaight and receiver Evan Spencer). Otherwise, most of the major players from 2014 — punter Tress Way, kicker Kai Forbath, long snapper Nick Sundberg and primary return man Roberts — all return in 2015. The most immediate question will be whether Crowder, the fourth-round pick, supplants Roberts as the top punt-return man. Don't be surprised as well if Forbath, an accurate kicker but one lacking in length, finds himself fending off a challenger for his job in training camp.



RYAN KERRIGAN, LB

FINAL ANALYSIS In previous Redskins seasons, management may have chosen to blow up the franchise by ditching Griffin, trading away picks to move up in the draft and nab the latest flavor-of-the-month phenom signal-caller. To their credit, McCloughan and Gruden avoided that temptation and did exactly the opposite — doubling down on Griffin as their starting quarterback, trading down in the draft to stockpile extra picks and emerging with some new cornerstone players and a lot of added depth.

As before, so much of the offensive success comes down to keeping Griffin healthy and on his feet. If the newly rebuilt offensive line is as solid as the Redskins hope, that will be much easier to envision, and may even deliver a boost to a running game that hasn't been the same since Griffin stopped being a significant running threat himself.

Defensively, there will be new looks both up front and in the secondary. With Orakpo gone and veteran cornerback DeAngelo Hall likely fighting to keep his job in training camp, the very soul of the defense is in the process of being transformed — which, if you know anything about the Redskins, can only be seen as a good thing.

This probably isn't a team that can challenge the Cowboys and Eagles atop the division in 2015, but even a finish somewhere around .500 — which is entirely possible — would be considered a significant step in the right direction.

In a marked contrast to previous seasons, the Redskins constructed a defined draft strategy and then stuck to it. The strategy, scripted by GM Scot McCloughan, called for trading down to accrue extra picks, and focusing those picks on size, toughness and special teams adaptability, particularly in the later rounds. Brandon Scherff, the top pick, will almost certainly start immediately at right tackle, a decided weak spot for the Redskins in 2014, and Preston Smith will compete with 2014 second-rounder Trent Murphy for playing time as an edge rusher. Matt Jones and Arie Kouandjio most likely slot in as offensive reserves, while the rest of the Redskins' draft haul will need to prove their special teams bona fides to earn roster spots.

SCOUTING THE REDSKINS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP WASHINGTON "The set of skill players in D.C. is not an issue with DeSean Jackson, Pierre Garçon and Andre Roberts, plus tight ends Jordan Reed and Niles Paul and running back Alfred Morris. Reed is super-talented, but has to find a way to stay healthy. ... The line is simply awful other than left tackle Trent Williams, and he is no consensus Pro Bowler. Hence, their selection of Brandon Scherff as a Day 1 starter at No. 5 overall. ... Defensively, Jim Haslett survived one season under Jay Gruden, but now Joe Barry is in charge. ... They tried to rebuild the defensive line by signing Stephen Paea (Bears), Terrance Knighton (Broncos) and Ricky Jean-Francois (Colts) during free agency. ... Outside linebacker Ryan Kerrigan continues to be one of the more under-appreciated players in the NFL. All he does is play hard and produce each year. The hope is that Trent Murphy and second-rounder Preston Smith can become part of a three-man pass-rushing rotation. ... The secondary has a lot of names, but not sure how good they will be. ... RGIII has been his own soap opera, but the truth is that the offensive line and defense have been in disrepair, and until those things are fixed, it may not matter if he 'talks small and plays big' in 2015. It's been a roller-coaster ride since they drafted him."

New Bears head coach John Fox and his staff have an infinitely easier task than the one Marc Trestman undertook in 2013 and failed to achieve. Fox will not be burdened by lofty expectations. He inherits a 5–11 team that isn't realistically expected to contend in Year 1. Trestman took over a 10–6 team that barely missed the playoffs and was considered, right or wrong, to be primed for a deep playoff run. Never happened. Under Trestman, the Bears regressed to 8–8 and then to the 5–11 disaster that terminated his employment and ushered in Fox, whose last three Broncos teams went 38–10 in the regular season and won the AFC West in each of his four seasons. But Fox failed to produce the postseason success expected by team president John Elway and was replaced by Gary Kubiak.

In Chicago, Fox has the additional advantage of a much more accomplished and highly regarded staff than what Trestman was able to cobble together.

Fox has an added obstacle since the Bears will be transitioning to a 3-4 defense for the first time ever, but he's got highly respected coordinator Vic Fangio overseeing the conversion.

OFFENSE Adam Gase was one of the hottest head-coaching candidates in the offseason, interviewing for top jobs with four teams, including the Bears, but he settled for re-upping with Fox. Gase spent the previous six years in Denver, including four under Fox, the last two as offensive coordinator.

He inherits quarterback Jay Cutler, who will be playing for his fifth offensive coordinator as he enters his seventh season in Chicago. Cutler's inability to play up to his potential is the major reason the Bears' offensive coordinator job has been a revolving door of men who have tried but never succeeded in getting Cutler to avoid the mistakes and inconsistencies that have plagued his career. Last season was no different. Cutler's 88.6 passer rating was the second best of his career, but he led the NFL with 24 turnovers, including 18 interceptions, which tied for second most in his nine-year career.

All-purpose, workhorse running back Matt Forté enters his contract year wanting an extension that he's unlikely to get. He turns 30 in December and, despite becoming only the second player in NFL history to gain at least 1,000 yards rushing while catching at least 100 passes last year, he is not getting better. He averaged just 3.9 yards per carry last season, his lowest number by far in five years, and he averaged a pedestrian 7.9 yards on his 102 receptions. Forté had one run of 20 yards or longer last season on 266 carries. Cutler had three on just 39 attempts.

One of new GM Ryan Pace's first major personnel moves was to send productive but distracting wide receiver Brandon Marshall packing. Pace sent the five-time Pro Bowler and a seventh-round draft pick to the Jets and was content to get just a fifth-round pick in return. The Bears used the seventh overall selection in the draft on his replacement, Kevin White.

The Bears also signed free agent Eddie Royal, a quick, veteran slot receiver who gives them something they've been missing. Royal had a bounce-back season with the Chargers in 2014, posting his best numbers since his rookie year in 2008 with the Broncos, when his quarterback was, yep, Cutler. The Bears had high expectations for long, lanky Marquess Wilson a year ago, but a fractured collarbone in training camp limited him to seven games.

Alshon Jeffery is the go-to guy with Marshall gone and White a bit of a project. Jeffery has nice size, a wide catch radius and the ability to win jump balls downfield. He has 174 receptions for 2,554 yards and 17 touchdowns in the previous two seasons, but it remains to be seen how he handles the No. 1 role without Marshall around.

Tight end Martellus Bennett stayed away from a voluntary minicamp, wanting a new contract just halfway through his four-year, $20.4 million deal. Difficult as it is to believe, Bennett may be more self-involved than Marshall, but he turned in a career year in 2014.

The offensive line, not great to begin with, was devastated by injuries. The guard tandem of Kyle Long and Matt Slauson is excellent, but left tackle Jermon Bushrod's best years appear to be behind him, and the Bears need better play at right tackle than they got from Jordan Mills. Will Montgomery seems like a stopgap solution at center. Michael Ola, a rookie last year with CFL experience, showed exceptional versatility, starting games at every O-line position except center.

DEFENSE Fox and Pace downplay the effect that a scheme change will have on a roster built to play a 4-3, because they'll play 4-3 on some passing downs, making the defense more of a hybrid. Defensive linemen Ray McDonald and Jarvis Jenkins were signed based

NEW ERA

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

THE ROAD LESS TRAVELED Born in Nigeria, sixth-round pick Tayo Fabuluje came to the U.S. as a toddler. When he was 5, his father, a dispatcher with a trucking company, was deported for his role in a conspiracy to rob drivers on their routes. Fabuluje began his college career at BYU but redshirted his freshman year. He transferred to TCU to be closer to home and sat out per NCAA rules. He started 12 games in 2012 but didn't play football in '13, dropping out so he could work to support his sister after their mother was incarcerated.

BROTHER ACT Guard Kyle Long's brother Chris is a defensive end with the Rams, and tight end Martellus Bennett's brother Michael is a defensive end with the Seahawks. Cornerback Kyle Fuller's brother Corey is a wide receiver with the Lions. Safety Brock Vereen's brother Shane is a running back with the Giants, and linebacker Sam Acho's brother Emmanuel is a linebacker with the Eagles.

FORMER FOES NOW TEAMMATES Third-round center Hroniss Grasu went head-to-head with second-round nose tackle Eddie Goldman in an FBS semifinal game. "He's a very, very good player — very explosive," Grasu says. "He's a player I have a lot of respect for. I thought both of us had a really good game on each other."

DIVINE GUIDANCE While he was contemplating his options as an unrestricted free agent, safety Antrel Rolle prayed on a Sunday night for a sign to point him in the right direction. Several hours later, at 4:33 a.m., he was awakened by an e-mail: "Orbitz alert: flights to Chicago, discount fare." Rolle considered it a sign, and he wound up signing a three-year, $11.25 million deal with the Bears on March 11.

DO OVER? In 2014, Phil Emery's final season as the Bears' GM, they drafted defensive tackle Ego Ferguson in the second round, running back Ka'Deem Carey in the middle of the fourth round and safety Brock Vereen at the end of the fourth round. In 2015, Ryan Pace's first year as GM, the Bears drafted defensive tackle Eddie Goldman in the second round, running back Jeremy Langford in the fourth round and safety Adrian Amos early in the fifth, practically mirroring last year's selections. "It was really best player available the whole way through," Pace says. "And that's how it fell."

on their 3-4 experience, and 336-pound Eddie Goldman was drafted 39th overall to play nose tackle. The Bears' biggest free-agent acquisition was 280-pound Pernell McPhee, who is primarily a linebacker but has the versatility to play almost anywhere in the front seven on a 3-4. McPhee was a key backup to superstars Terrell Suggs and Elvis Dumervil last year with the Ravens, getting 7.5 sacks while playing 49 percent of the snaps. The Bears are convinced that the 26-year-old is an ascending player whose numbers will rise proportionately with increased playing time.

The key to the conversion will be how former 4-3 defensive ends Jared Allen, Lamarr Houston and Willie Young adapt to playing outside linebacker in a 3-4. Young seems like a natural, but he's coming off a late-December Achilles injury. Houston will be trying to bounce back from a forgettable 2014 that ended in Week 8 when he suffered a torn ACL celebrating his only sack. The Bears also added inside linebackers Sam Acho and Mason Foster to their holdover collection of run-of-the-mill linebackers.

ALSHON JEFFERY, WR

Veteran safety Antrel Rolle should upgrade a position that has been a weakness for years, but he'll be 33 before the season ends. Cornerback is thin: Last year's first-round pick Kyle Fuller could be a centerpiece, but he had an up-and-down rookie season, and veteran Tim Jennings slumped badly after getting a big contract following back-to-back Pro Bowl seasons.

SPECIALISTS There's no reason to believe that Robbie Gould, the seventh-most-accurate field-goal kicker in NFL history, won't bounce back from the worst season of his 10-year career. Gould hit a career-low 75 percent of his 12 attempts and missed the final four games with a quad injury. Punter Pat O'Donnell was a bit inconsistent as a rookie, but he's a keeper. The long-snapper job will probably go to free-agent addition Thomas Gafford. Late-season veteran pickup Marc Mariani upgraded the kick return game in 2014 and is the leading contender to handle punt returns.

FINAL ANALYSIS The Bears have been to the postseason once in eight years, and hardly anyone believes that this is a one-year fix. In his two other head-coaching stops, Fox has taken the Panthers (2003) and the Broncos (2013) to the Super Bowl. But neither of those teams was in the same division with Aaron Rodgers.

Kevin White has every measurable to become a No. 1 receiver in the NFL, although it may take him some time to master the precision routes required in Adam Gase's offense. Brown is almost as big as Brandon Marshall but much faster, much less of a nuisance and much less interested in promoting himself at all costs. Eddie Goldman should be the centerpiece of the 3-4. He's got the size and strength to stuff running plays up the middle and enough agility to have played almost every defensive line position for the Seminoles. Hroniss Grasu could use more bulk strength, but he's a four-year starter from a top program (Oregon) and an excellent technician. Michigan State product Jeremy Langford brings speed and a home-run dimension lacking in the Bears' backfield. Adrian Amos has better cover ability than most safeties but isn't very physical. Tayo Fabuluje is a raw project with tremendous upside. He's a great story who took a circuitous route to the NFL, overcoming massive obstacles along the way.

SCOUTING THE BEARS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP CHICAGO "With high hopes for 2014, the Bears' season quickly dissolved into a 5–11 campaign due to a dysfunctional locker room, no apparent leadership from the head coach or QB position and a defense that made zero strides as a unit. ... New offensive coordinator Adam Gase followed John Fox from Denver, and he has the unenviable task of 'fixing' Jay Cutler. ... Brandon Marshall was traded to the Jets, but Matt Forté, Alshon Jeffery and Martellus Bennett all return, and West Virginia WR Kevin White was chosen at pick No. 7, so there is talent in the building. ... Guard Kyle Long has proven to be a Pro Bowl-level player, but the rest of the offensive line is a work in progress. ... Vic Fangio comes to the Windy City from the 49ers as the defensive coordinator, and he has one of the toughest jobs in football as Chicago tries to transition from the 4-3 to the 3-4. ... They signed a notable free agent at every level of the defense in end/outside linebacker Pernell McPhee (Ravens), linebacker Mason Foster (Buccaneers) and safety Antrel Rolle (Giants). McPhee has never been a full-time player, Foster missed most of 2014 with an Achilles injury and Rolle is on the backside of his career. ... Fox and Co. will try to push the reset button with a roster of mixed pieces and parts, but this looks like the weakest team in the division."

Coach Jim Caldwell didn't do exactly what he promised in his first year in Detroit. The new boss was supposed to unlock the Lions' offensive potential, but instead he unleashed arguably the NFL's most ferocious defense. He forged better team chemistry, but couldn't keep his best player from bolting in free agency. He returned the Lions to the playoffs with an 11-win season — the franchise's best record since 1991 — but he also watched as his team blew a fourth-quarter lead and, after the refs picked up a flag, handed a wild-card playoff game to the Dallas Cowboys.

Still, there was something to build on, even with one of the cornerstone pieces of the Lions' massive rebuilding effort — Ndamukong Suh — taking his talents to South Beach. Caldwell's steady, straightforward approach has made a difference with a once-reckless bunch, on and off the field. And there's plenty of playmaking talent returning on both sides of the ball. But the next step is where the Lions — 20 years removed from their last back-to-back playoff berths — have historically stumbled.

OFFENSE The Matthew Stafford 2.0 reboot wasn't an unqualified success. But with the arrival of a quarterback whisperer in Caldwell, new coordinator Joe Lombardi and position coach Jim Bob Cooter, the changes were evident. Stafford, who has started every game the last four seasons, improved his footwork and his completion percentage, cut down on interceptions (from 19 to 12) and still led five game-winning, fourth-quarter drives.

But he clearly struggled with a more conservative mandate in a new offense that borrowed heavily from Lombardi's voluminous Saints playbook. "I thought that he played smart football," Lombardi says, "and sometimes to a fault." This season, Lombardi says he'll encourage Stafford to take more risks, and more shots down the field.

He has to, with one of the best pass-catching tandems in the league in Calvin Johnson and Golden Tate. The Lions were one of five NFL teams with multiple 1,000-yard receivers last season. And after a disappointing rookie season, tight end Eric Ebron — the 10th overall pick in 2014 — is expected to play a much bigger role in the passing game this fall.

But all that's dependent on an overhauled offensive line that allowed 45 sacks — a career-high for Stafford — and a running game that ranked 28th in the NFL a year ago. In the backfield, rookie second-round pick Ameer Abdullah, a hard-working, productive runner at Nebraska, replaces oft-injured Reggie Bush in a tandem with Joique Bell. Theo Riddick, a pass-catching threat, figures to get more snaps as well.

The Lions invested a first-round pick in Duke's Laken Tomlinson, a massive run-blocking guard who draws favorable comparisons to the Lions' Larry Warford. Tomlinson will replace departed vet Rob Sims at left guard, while a healthy Warford returns on the right, flanking second-year pro Travis Swanson, who steps in for Dominic Raiola, the Lions' starting center for the last 14 seasons. Manny Ramirez, a former Lions draft pick acquired during the draft from Denver, is back as veteran insurance on the interior. And Riley Reiff remains the left tackle for now, with LaAdrian Waddle (coming off ACL surgery) and Cornelius Lucas on the right.

DEFENSE Suh is gone, and though the Lions replaced him with five-time Pro Bowl tackle Haloti Ngata in a trade with Baltimore, they'll be hard-pressed to match last season's dominance up front. With Suh commanding double teams on every play, the Lions led the league in run defense. They also recorded 42 sacks, with 34 coming from the defensive line.

But it's not just Suh who left. The Lions also let Nick Fairley, who missed half the season with a knee injury, walk in free agency, along with primary backup C.J. Mosley and end George Johnson. Ziggy Ansah and Jason Jones are the returning starters at end. In Ansah the Lions believe they have a Pro Bowl-caliber right end who'll post double-digit sack totals, provided he can stay healthy. Jones offers inside-out versatility, and rookie Gabe Wright, a high-motor player from Auburn, will get thrown into the tackle rotation immediately with Ngata and Tyrunn Walker, an under-the-radar free-agent pickup from New Orleans.

The one key contributor the Lions did keep last winter, though, was coordinator Teryl Austin, a rising star who interviewed for multiple head-coaching vacancies. His aggressive, blitzing schemes brought the best out of a back seven that used to be the Lions' Achilles heel.

DeAndre Levy emerged as one of the NFL's best outside linebackers, and sure-tackling Stephen Tulloch returns in the middle after missing most of last season with a torn ACL.

NEW ERA

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

LOOK OUT BELOW Matthew Stafford's offseason began with a wedding, as the 27-year-old was married to his college sweetheart, Kelly Hall, a former Georgia cheerleader, in April in Atlanta. The newlyweds spent their honeymoon in the South Pacific, and Stafford — whose risk-taking on the field has gotten him in trouble in the past — couldn't help but live dangerously. The couple went skydiving, and also tried out the Nevis Swing, the "world's largest swing" over a 500-foot deep canyon in Queenstown, New Zealand. Asked if it was his idea, he laughed, "Hell, no — those were Kelly's. But I couldn't let her do it and not do it myself." As for the Lions, he added, "I assume I'm good. I didn't tell them I was doing it. I wasn't going to let them tell me no. It's better to ask for forgiveness."

DAREDEVIL Stafford's offseason fun is still no match for DeAndre Levy, whose past globetrotting adventures include bushwhacking through the remotest region of the Amazon, hiking the Inca Trail in Peru and swimming with great white sharks in South Africa. This summer Levy went wing-walking on a biplane just outside of Olympic National Park, and he has the video to prove it. Said team president Tom Lewand: "The official position is, 'Don't fall.'"

HOME COOKING Like every NFL team, the Lions crisscross the country scouting college players every fall. But they found rookie fifth-round pick Michael Burton in their own backyard. The Rutgers fullback caught the eye of general manager Martin Mayhew as he watched the inaugural Quick Lane Bowl at the Lions' Ford Field in December. "He saw a kid that was versatile and had good athleticism and could run routes and catch the ball and block and be a real effective player," offensive coordinator Joe Lombardi says.

GETTING HITCHED Stafford's not the only Lions star hearing wedding bells. Calvin Johnson also is engaged after proposing to his girlfriend, Brittney McNorton, while in Baltimore for the Ed Block Courage Awards in March. And as the front office and coaching staff place a premium on high-character, low-maintenance players, it's probably worth noting that four of their draft picks the last two years were engaged or already married, including Alex Carter this spring.

DOCTOR'S IN Laken Tomlinson's only a rookie, but he already has a plan for life after football. A pre-med student at Duke who graduated with degrees in psychology and evolutionary anthropology, Tomlinson wants to become a neurosurgeon after football. He spent time as an undergrad in the operating room, shadowing former linebacker Carlos Bagley, who is a neurosurgeon at Duke's medical school.

The Lions had big plans for 2014 second-rounder Kyle Van Noy as a hybrid pass rusher, but a sports hernia derailed his season. Expect to see more of that role this fall, with Tahir Whitehead also factoring in.

The safeties — led by All-Pro Glover Quin — led the NFL with 11 interceptions. And though James Ihedigbo was absent at the start of offseason workouts over a contract dispute, the secondary returns largely intact. Rasheean Mathis returns as a steady, savvy vet opposite Darius Slay, who enjoyed a breakout sophomore season. Injuries proved costly at nickel back, and both Bill Bentley and Nevin Lawson remain question marks this fall. But the Lions have added depth there, signing Josh Wilson and drafting Alex Carter and Quandre Diggs. And they often went with three-safety looks last year thanks to the versatility of backups Isa Abdul-Quddus and Don Carey.

GOLDEN TATE, WR

SPECIALISTS The Lions' kicking game might've cost them a division title. They missed eight of their first nine field-goal attempts from 40-plus yards last season, and all three kicks in a 17–14 home loss to Buffalo. They shuffled through two kickers — first rookie draft pick Nate Freese, then Alex Henery — before signing free agent Matt Prater coming off an alcohol suspension. Only then did things settle down, which is why re-signing Prater was an offseason priority. Punter Sam Martin was a goat in the playoff loss at Dallas — his fourth-quarter shank set up the Cowboys' winning drive — but he ranked among the league's best in net punting and kickoffs. The coverage units struggled all year, though, and the Lions lacked explosiveness in the return game, so in comes a fiery new coordinator in Joe Marciano. And in Abdullah, the Lions believe they've drafted a player who'll contribute as a kick returner as well, possibly supplanting Jeremy Ross.

FINAL ANALYSIS When the Lions made the playoffs in 2011, they acted like they'd arrived, only to discover they hadn't with a 4–12 record after a disastrous offseason full of risky draft picks and off-field trouble. This time, they're not standing pat, with major changes in the trenches. And in Caldwell, they've got a well-respected coach who GM Martin Mayhew insists "makes a difference." With a brutal early-season schedule, it may not take long to find out if he's right.

LIONS IN THE DRAFT

2.	Ameer Abdullah	RB	5-9	205	Nebraska
3.	Alex Carter	CB	6-0	196	Stanford
4.	Gabe Wright	DT	6-3	300	Auburn
5.	Michael Burton	FB	5-11	242	Rutgers
6.	Quandre Diggs	CB	5-9	196	Texas
7.	Corey Robinson	OT	6-7	325	South Carolina

The Lions insist that they don't draft for need, yet they sure targeted specific needs with their first two picks. Laken Tomlinson isn't a flashy first-round choice, but the Lions got value in trading down, and they picked up a mauler — and a quick study — who should start immediately at left guard. Ameer Abdullah is the rookie replacement for Reggie Bush. He'll share carries with Joique Bell and might also provide a special-teams solution as a returner. He had a highly productive career at Nebraska. Alex Carter is a smart corner with good size, and the Lions were determined to get a high-motor defensive tackle who can play right away, trading a future third-rounder to snag Gabe Wright. Michael Burton seemed like a reach, but he's the lone true fullback — a position the Lions use 20-25 snaps a game — on the roster. Quandre Diggs has potential as a nickel back, while Corey Robinson's a huge developmental left tackle.

SCOUTING THE LIONS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP DETROIT "Give Jim Caldwell and his staff credit. They cleaned up the turnover margin and put themselves in position to win 11 games last year. ... They dialed back Matthew Stafford and relied on a defense that finished top three in run, total and scoring defense. ... Ndamukong Suh and his contract situation dominated the headlines for months before they opted not to franchise tag him, and he signed with the Dolphins. Now, the trick will be to see if Haloti Ngata and a host of others can replace Suh in the middle. ... Calvin Johnson continues to be a preeminent talent in the league, but he did miss three games in 2014. ... The Lions are looking for much more from last year's first-round pick, tight end Eric Ebron, to give Stafford another safe option. ... Joique Bell is a dependable back, and Theo Riddick will assume the Reggie Bush role. ... The offensive line was uneven last year, but first-round pick Laken Tomlinson should help right away. ... Defensive end Ziggy Ansah is developing nicely as a complete player, and their linebackers are underrated as a group. ... Overall, this secondary was OK with Suh and that front, but they did add a pair of rookie corners in Stanford's Alex Carter and Texas' Quandre Diggs. ... After shuffling through two placekickers, Matt Prater came onboard and was adequate enough to hold the job."

There's a better chance of Mike McCarthy having a training-camp movie night showing of "Remember the Titans" on a VHS tape than there is of the Green Bay Packers coach pinning his team's motivational hopes on its gut-wrenching loss to the Seattle Seahawks in the NFC Championship Game.

In the wake of their 28–22 overtime loss to the Seahawks — in which the Packers held a 16–0 lead at halftime and had the ball with a 19–7 lead with less than five minutes to play in regulation — McCarthy insists he will not use the loss as the basis for his annual theme, something he presents to the players every year at the start of training camp.

"(Come) hell or high water, we're not going to run out there and come up with some slogan, 'Remember Seattle!'" McCarthy says. "I'm not going to do that."

There's no doubt that the loss, with a berth in Super Bowl XLIX on the line, was heartbreaking — arguably the worst in franchise history, given the stakes and everything that went wrong in a short period of time.

So how do the Packers channel their disappointment into something positive going forward?

"That's the million-dollar question right there," says quarterback Aaron Rodgers, who won his second career NFL MVP award in 2014. "We had a great opportunity right in front of us to do something special. That's what makes it hard."

OFFENSE It all starts with Rodgers. Not only did he throw for 4,381 yards with 38 touchdown passes and just five interceptions (112.2 rating) last season, but he also played through a torn left calf that initially occurred at Tampa Bay on Dec. 21 and plagued him the rest of the year. Back to full health in the prime of his career at age 31, there's no reason to believe one of the league's best quarterbacks won't keep putting up those numbers — especially with the talent around him.

By re-signing wide receiver Randall Cobb (91 receptions, 1,287 yards, 12 touchdowns) and starting right tackle Bryan Bulaga in the spring, the Packers bring back everyone on an offense that led the NFL in scoring last season. Not only does Cobb return, but so do Jordy Nelson, who set the single-season franchise record for receiving yards (1,519) and caught a career-high 98 passes; and third-year running back Eddie Lacy, who has put together back-to-back 1,000-yard seasons during his first two years in the league. Lacy was healthier and more efficient (4.6-yard average) while not altering his bruising, physical style. Backup James Starks provides a more-than-capable No. 2 option in the backfield.

The offense should be even more potent if wide receiver Davante Adams, a second-round pick a year ago, and tight end Richard Rodgers, a third-round pick, make the Year 1 to Year 2 jump that the draft-and-develop Packers demand of their young, up-and-coming players. Adams flashed his ability with big games against New England in the regular season (six receptions, 121 yards) and against Dallas in the playoffs (seven receptions, 117 yards, TD) and has the look of another smart Ted Thompson pick at receiver. Rodgers the tight end, meanwhile, started slowly but caught 12 passes in the final four games (including playoffs), as his connection with Rodgers the quarterback — no relation — grew.

The consensus — from McCarthy to Aaron Rodgers to the offensive linemen themselves — was that the offensive success started with high-caliber play and consistency up front. Of the 18 games the Packers played, the same quintet — left tackle David Bakhtiari, left guard Josh Sitton, rookie center Corey Linsley, right guard T.J. Lang and Bulaga — started 17 of them. Bulaga, who'd suffered back-to-back season-ending injuries the previous two years, missed one game with a knee injury, but by season's end he'd regained the form he had in 2012. Linsley, meanwhile, was a godsend as a rookie fifth-round pick who played every offensive snap, while resident tough guys Lang and Sitton played through leg injuries late in the year. This group will take on all comers and won't cede the title of the NFL's best line to the Dallas Cowboys.

DEFENSE The Packers had the league's worst run defense until, in desperation, McCarthy and defensive coordinator Dom Capers moved four-time Pro Bowl outside linebacker Clay Matthews inside, where he played primarily in the nickel defense. It was a stroke of genius that saved the season and turned the unit around. While Matthews is hoping to spend less time in the middle this year — with the fourth-round selection of Michigan linebacker Jake Ryan and the coaches' high hopes for Carl Bradford after essentially a redshirt year, Matthews could get his wish — having No. 52 inside will still be part of the scheme. He had 11 sacks

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

THIS ... IS ... JEOPARDY! He's won a Super Bowl, the Super Bowl MVP and two NFL MVPs, but Aaron Rodgers has now achieved his true dream: He competed on "Celebrity Jeopardy!" during the off-season. The Packers quarterback went up against Kevin O'Leary, one of the stars of ABC's "Shark Tank," and retired astronaut Mark Kelly. Rodgers had long professed a love for the game show, having competed with his brother as a kid watching at home and expressing hope that someday his "Saturday Night Live"-inspired ads with State Farm might include a "Celebrity Jeopardy!" skit — with Will Ferrell as host Alex Trebek, Darrell Hammond as Sean Connery and Norm McDonald as Burt Reynolds. "That would kind of be my dream," Rodgers said in September 2013. "'Celebrity Jeopardy!' skits have always been at the top of my favorite list."

HAPPY FAVRE-GIVING After an estrangement that began with his unretirement and showdown with the front office before a 2008 trade to the Jets and turned even uglier with his two-year stint with the rival Minnesota Vikings, future Pro Football Hall of Fame quarterback Brett Favre returned to the fold after seven years away. His No. 4 was retired over the summer, and the team will celebrate his great career by unveiling his name and number on Lambeau Field's north end zone façade against the Chicago Bears on Thanksgiving night, as the Packers play their first home game on Turkey Day since 1923. It's only right that they'd celebrate Favre against the Bears, since he went 22–10 against them while in Green Bay.

CARTWHEELING COACH Mike McCarthy didn't exactly do backflips when All-Pro defensive tackle Ndamukong Suh left the Detroit Lions for the Miami Dolphins in free agency, but the Packers coach was certainly pleased by the news — on two fronts. "I'm trying to teach my 6-year-old to do a cartwheel right now, but not that I'm doing any," McCarthy said. "I thought it was a win-win. It was good to see him leave the division, and it was great to see (Dolphins coach) Joe Philbin (a former Packers assistant) improve his football team."

MUTUAL ADMIRATION SOCIETY McCarthy has long admired New England Patriots coach Bill Belichick, and as it turns out, the feeling is mutual. Not only did Belichick have kind words for McCarthy before and after the teams' November meeting last season, but the NFL's longest-tenured active coach also gave McCarthy the highest of compliments at the annual league meetings in response to a question about McCarthy relinquishing play-calling duties. "Mike's one of the best coaches in the league, one of the best coaches I've ever gone up against," Belichick said. "I'm sure whatever he's doing is the right thing. I have a lot of respect for him. I'm sure whatever decisions he's making for the Green Bay Packers are good ones and ones that he thinks are right. I personally wouldn't question anything he does."

and made his fifth Pro Bowl in that hybrid role, so he can be effective splitting his time.

Matthews' move was made possible by the rarest of moves by Thompson — the signing of a big-name veteran. Outside linebacker Julius Peppers had a turn-back-the-clock season, recording seven sacks while intercepting two passes, both of which he returned for touchdowns. At age 35, it's possible he could fall off the table, but he certainly doesn't look like a player at the end of the line.

Up front, defensive tackles B.J. Raji and Letroy Guion came back on one-year deals and should anchor the middle. The two key players, though, are 2013 first-round pick Datone Jones, who has been a disappointment in his first two seasons, and Mike Daniels, who has had a greater impact each season. Youngsters Josh Boyd and Khyri Thornton have done little to this point and must contribute more.

RANDALL COBB, WR

The safety position has gone from a weakness to a strength with an improved Morgan Burnett and 2014 first-round pick Ha Ha Clinton-Dix, but now there are questions at cornerback with the departures of starter Tramon Williams and trusted backup Davon House. Casey Hayward is penciled in as the starter opposite Sam Shields, but nickel back Micah Hyde and draft picks Damarious Randall and Quinten Rollins will have something to say.

SPECIALISTS Veteran kicker Mason Crosby is coming off two excellent seasons after struggling in 2012, while punter Tim Masthay had perhaps his worst season when the bottom fell out during the second half of the year. While Hyde has been excellent as a punt returner, the kickoff return game was abysmal and needs a boost. Perhaps rookie third-round pick Ty Montgomery, the all-time kickoff return leader in Stanford history, is the answer.

FINAL ANALYSIS Four straight division titles are nothing to sneeze at, but the annual postseason disappointments have gotten tougher to bear for the Packers — the hardest being the way they snatched defeat from the jaws of victory in Seattle last January. With the offense intact and the defense still having room for improvement, the Packers deserve to be in the Super Bowl 50 conversation as long as Rodgers is healthy. The biggest question mark is coaching. McCarthy relinquished the play-calling duties during the offseason, so if the offense is still potent and allows McCarthy to pay more attention to the defense and horrendous special teams, it could be a game-changer.

While general manager Ted Thompson has long said that he doesn't draft for need, by the end of the three-day draft he'd filled most of the existing holes he had on the roster. Damarious Randall and Quinten Rollins will compete for immediate playing time after the offseason losses of Tramon Williams and Davon House, while Ty Montgomery should help the anemic return game and Jake Ryan could be the new A.J. Hawk — without the expectations of being the No. 5 overall pick like Hawk was. Christian Ringo could crack the defensive line rotation given the underachievers on the roster, while Kennard Backman will have an opportunity at tight end because the team is thin there. The Brett Hundley pick is the exception, since the Packers not only have the two-time NFL MVP as their starter, but also a more-than-competent backup in Scott Tolzien. Perhaps the coaching staff can develop Hundley and deal him for a future draft pick down the road.

SCOUTING THE PACKERS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP GREEN BAY "GM Ted Thompson and head coach Mike McCarthy are the longest-tenured duo in the entire NFL, and that continuity pays dividends when it comes to scouting and developing players. ... Offensively, Green Bay is set at all of the skill positions with Aaron Rodgers, Eddie Lacy, Jordy Nelson and Randall Cobb all at the top of their respective games. ... The offensive line is more functional than spectacular, but they found a fifth-round gem in center Corey Linsley last year. ... This is a middle-of-the-league defense, and they will rely on a wave of linemen and the flexibility of Clay Matthews and Julius Peppers to bolster their front. They drafted Arizona State defensive back Damarious Randall in the first round and Miami (Ohio) corner Quinten Rollins in the second. Rollins could be a star. He only played one season of college football. ... Much will be expected of cornerbacks Casey Hayward and Micah Hyde, so the competition for playing time will be intense in training camp. ... McCarthy announced over the winter that he would no longer call plays in order to focus on the entire team, this coming after the Packers gave up seven blocked kicks during the season and melted down in the final minutes of the NFC title game on special teams. Still, as long as Rodgers is healthy, they are the clear frontrunners in the NFC North."

Young Teddy Bridgewater's unusual composure and good old Mike Zimmer's as-expected defensive acumen gave the Vikings a renewed sense of direction despite their 7–9 finish a year ago. Now comes the next step, which the Vikings will take with the full-on power of Adrian Peterson's unbridled return to the NFL.

Bridgewater went 5–4 in his last nine games as a rookie quarterback, and Zimmer orchestrated a turnaround from last in scoring defense to 11th in his first year as a head coach. And they did it with 2012 NFL MVP Peterson missing all but the season opener as he dealt with the law and the league over injuries he inflicted while disciplining his 4-year-old son. So, despite Peterson's reservations about returning to a team and a city he feels didn't support him initially, the Vikings held him to his contract because they believe he can help carry Bridgewater past the verge of being something special.

"I think Teddy's play gives fans hope," Zimmer says. "Hopefully, they also like how we compete. There's no question what Adrian gives us. But we've got a long way to go."

OFFENSE Bridgewater didn't become a starter until Week 3, so he hasn't played with Peterson or enjoyed the steady diet of eight and nine defenders crowding the box. Offensive coordinator Norv Turner, for one, can't wait to get started.

Turner has had decades of success running an offense that melds John Robinson's running game with the old Air Coryell route-numbering system. He's expecting a return to greatness for the 30-year-old Peterson and a significant residual effect on Bridgewater and the play-action, deep-ball attack. That part of the offense struggled last year until Charles Johnson, who was claimed off of Cleveland's practice squad, emerged late as the No. 1 receiver by default.

General manager Rick Spielman executed a low-risk trade, sending his extra fifth-round pick to Miami for moody receiver Mike Wallace. His contract contains no guaranteed money beyond this season, and room for his $9.9 million cap hit was created painlessly with the release of Greg Jennings, whose $11 million cap figure was outlandish for an aging player who could no longer consistently separate from defenders. If Wallace plays like he did in Pittsburgh, when he was the league's fastest deep threat, the Vikings got a steal. If Wallace pouts like he did in Miami, the Vikings can remove the cancer before it infects teammates, particularly receiver Cordarrelle Patterson, who took a big step backward last year and has been given numerous warnings to take his job more seriously.

At tight end, Turner still has high hopes for Kyle Rudolph, who has prototypical size and enough speed to be one of the league's tougher mismatches. Unfortunately, injuries limited him to nine games last season and 17 over the past two years.

Meanwhile, the sense of excitement about the offense is rooted in the popular belief that the Vikings finally found a franchise quarterback. Poise, touch and adequate arm strength contributed to Bridgewater posting the third-best completion percentage (64.4) by a rookie in NFL history.

DEFENSE Zimmer's first priority last year was transforming a reactionary Cover-2 scheme into an aggressive unit that attacked from multiple fronts and blitz packages. Initial results were encouraging as the unit ranked seventh in pass defense, but the 25th-ranked run defense disappointed often and needed more time for linemen to adjust to an unfamiliar scheme.

Four defenders have shown All-Pro potential, and all are younger than 28. Outside linebacker Anthony Barr (23) was a Defensive Rookie of the Year candidate before suffering a knee injury. Cornerback Xavier Rhodes (25) was shadowing No. 1 receivers with a swagger during a breakout season under Zimmer, a noted defensive backs whisperer. Safety Harrison Smith (26) was the team's biggest Pro Bowl snub. And end Everson Griffen (27) had a career-high 12 sacks while justifying the team's decision to let Jared Allen walk.

Spielman used the draft to add two more likely starters in cornerback Trae Waynes and Eric Kendricks, who should become the team's first three-down middle linebacker in years.

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

WELL-KEPT SECRET Linebacker Anthony Barr had no idea the Vikings were interested in drafting his former UCLA teammate, roommate and best friend Eric Kendricks. General manager Rick Spielman shed some light on why Barr was kept in the dark. "He tweets too much," Spielman says. "You know how I am about Twitter."

FAMILY MATTERS Sixth-round draft pick Tyrus Thompson is married with two kids. He's from a military family. Asked if his wife also is from a military family, he said, "Correct. Yes sir. Her mom was a sniper." A mother-in-law sniper sounds, frankly, frightening, eh? "She tells me I should be scared," Thompson says.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY Kendricks might be the only player in the league who has had only five birthdays. "Being 5 and being in the pros is definitely an accomplishment of mine," says Kendricks with tongue firmly in cheek as a leap-year baby from Feb. 29, 1992. "I've dreamt about this since I was 3 years old."

CHARACTER FIRST First-round draft pick Trae Waynes knows exactly why the Vikings considered him an A-plus character prospect. Both of his parents are junior high guidance counselors. "(Character) is really important," Waynes says. "My parents were hard on me and my brother. They kept us out of trouble, and they raised us right. I owe all of that to them."

ONE OF THE GUYS When the offseason conditioning program began in April, Teddy Bridgewater was there. "I'm always trying to get better," he says. "I appreciate people saying that I had a good rookie season. But I know that if I play at that same level, we'll be 7–9 again."

LIGHTER AND FASTER? Waynes is expected to take Captain Munnerlyn's starting left cornerback job quickly. Munnerlyn, who would become the No. 3 corner, vowed to put up a fight by regaining some speed he says he lost last year. "I've probably lost 10, 12 pounds, in that range," he says. "I feel good. I changed my diet. I don't eat red meat and all that other stuff like I used to. So I'm excited. I'm on my LeBron James diet. That's what I call it."

MAKE OR BREAK No player was more disappointing last year than receiver Cordarrelle Patterson, who went from breakout candidate to being benched and warned to start taking his job more seriously. Maybe he has. "I feel like this year is going to be the year," he says. "It will make me or break me. This whole offseason, I spent a lot of time just thinking to myself, 'How can I get better?'"

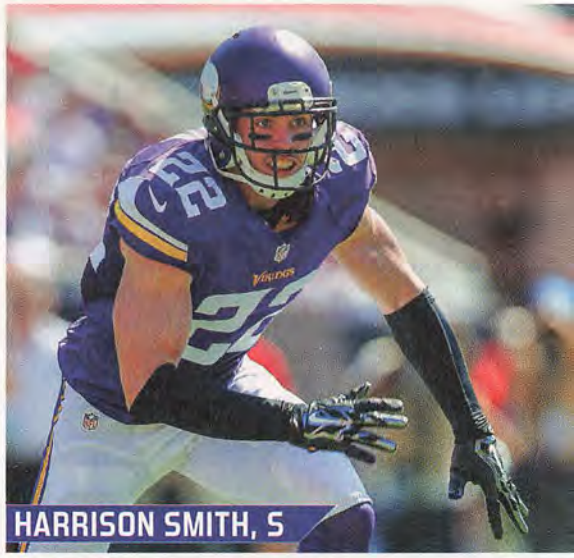
Backup tackle Tom Johnson posted a career-high 6.5 sacks as part of a deep rotation. Meanwhile, starter Sharrif Floyd had 43 quarterback hurries and will enjoy a breakout season once he stays healthy enough.

At linebacker, Barr is a three-down star with no limitations. Chad Greenway, 32, returns for a 10th season at outside linebacker. The coaches still value his experience and leadership but are likely to give Kendricks his reps in the nickel.

In the secondary, Waynes gives the Vikings a big cover corner, a must against the big receivers in the NFC North. With Waynes on board, Captain Munnerlyn can slide inside exclusively as the nickel back. Meanwhile, at strong safety, Robert Blanton won the job by default last summer but didn't establish himself as a long-term solution. The preferred candidate to win the job this year is Antone Exum Jr., a second-year player who was converted to safety a year ago.



HARRISON SMITH, S

Two former Bengals — cornerback Terence Newman, who will be 37 when the season starts, and safety Taylor Mays — could start or contribute this season for Zimmer, their former defensive coordinator in Cincinnati.

SPECIALISTS Kicker Blair Walsh's accuracy was a career-low 74.3 percent as the Vikings moved outdoors to their temporary new home last season. But don't fret. The 2012 first-team All-Pro remains a viable scoring threat from 50 yards and farther. And the team is moving back indoors in 2016. Punter Jeff Locke enters his third season still needing more consistency and precision on punts inside the 10-yard line. Patterson, who was All-Pro first team as a rookie kick returner in 2013, regressed there as well. Punt returner Marcus Sherels remains a safety blanket, but rookie Stefon Diggs could push Sherels for his roster spot.

FINAL ANALYSIS Peterson could challenge 2,000 yards, while Bridgewater and the defense each hope to take another step. But whether the team can close the gap in its own division will be the big question. After all, the Vikings were 0–4 against Green Bay and Detroit and were the only team in the league not to beat an opponent with a winning record. And their schedule gets tougher with the NFC West and AFC West in the rotation. The Vikings are heading in the right direction and should be a playoff contender. Getting there and winning their first postseason game since the 2009 season could be another matter.

VIKINGS IN THE DRAFT

7.	Austin Shepherd	OT	6-4	315	Alabama
7.	Edmond Robinson	OLB	6-3	245	Newberry

The top two picks are projected starters at defensive positions of need heading into the draft. Trae Waynes, a big corner with 4.31 speed, is expected to start at left corner, allowing the smaller Captain Munnerlyn to play exclusively inside in the nickel. Meanwhile, Eric Kendricks' superior instincts and cover ability will make him the team's first three-down middle linebacker in years. No other immediate starters are expected to surface, but Stefon Diggs has return ability and will challenge veteran Marcus Sherels for the punt return job. Meanwhile, T.J. Clemmings, a highly rated player who fell in the draft because of concerns about a stress fracture in his foot, is healthy and could be the swing tackle who pushes both starters.

SCOUTING THE VIKINGS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP MINNESOTA "Mike Zimmer put his imprint on this team with a no-nonsense, tough-guy approach that resulted in a very competitive 7–9 record despite not having Adrian Peterson for the final 15 games. ... There are three major coaching chores for the Vikings on offense in 2015: The continued development of Teddy Bridgewater, getting tackle Matt Kalil back to Pro Bowl form and tapping into the raw talent of underachieving wide receiver Cordarrelle Patterson. ... Bridgewater looks like the future at the position after starting 12 games while leading the team to four come-from-behind victories. ... At the end of the day, Peterson was not traded, so the anticipation is that he will be in a purple uniform by September. ... They traded for Mike Wallace from the Dolphins to give them a vertical threat, while figuring out what happens with Patterson. ... Tight end Kyle Rudolph is solid, and the rest of the offensive line is intact, so there is a degree of continuity around Bridgewater. ... Defensive end Everson Griffen and outside linebacker Anthony Barr are both playmakers, and the Vikings added an immediate starter in round two with the selection of UCLA linebacker Eric Kendricks. ... The reality is that there is a blue-chip talent in virtually every position group on this roster."

The bleeding never stopped. The Falcons blew a 17-point lead at home in the 2012 NFC Championship Game and, two full seasons later, still haven't recovered. An offensive line thin on talent suffered a collection of season-ending injuries in two consecutive offseasons. Julio Jones, easily the most talented player on the roster, was lost in 2013 to a broken foot. Tony Gonzalez, the greatest tight end in NFL history, retired after a frustrating 4–12 year that was supposed to be a last run at the Super Bowl. A defense built on bending instead of breaking shattered beyond repair, and a hasty personnel change did nothing to fix both lines in 2014.

From 2008-12, the Atlanta Falcons under Mike Smith and GM Thomas Dimitroff were a blueprint for stability and success. Matt Ryan became a franchise quarterback, and the organization posted back-to-back winning seasons for the first time in history. But since that so-close title run, the Falcons have imploded, winning 10 games in two years. Smith became the fall guy, due in large part to the defensive-minded head coach's stubborn control of a league-worst unit. Accordingly, owner Arthur Blank has now turned to Seattle defensive coordinator Dan Quinn, architect of back-to-back Super Bowl defenses under Pete Carroll.

Entering 2013, the franchise seemed a tweak or two away from its first Super Bowl title. Entering 2014, conventional wisdom wrote off a stunning collapse as an extreme bout with Murphy's Law. There's no clear prognosis now: Atlanta has to rebuild its defense almost from scratch while finding a way to keep Ryan alive and productive.

The cautionary tale of almost any NFL failure is that no matter what, you can't win without an elite quarterback throwing to consistent playmakers. The Falcons have one of the most consistent quarterbacks in the league and perhaps its best wide receiver. The problem — and the cold truth for Falcons fans — is that after that, there's not much else.

OFFENSE Ryan, Jones and Roddy White: Even in the worst stretch of the Smith era, that battery remained reliable (when healthy). What 2014 exposed is that just about everything else has imploded around the Pro Bowl trio since the 2012 playoff run.

Expect an entirely new running game under new offensive coordinator Kyle Shanahan. His 2014 Browns were fourth in the league in rushing touchdowns, while the Falcons' 1,498 rushing yards were the 22nd-rated attack in Football Outsiders' offensive efficiency metrics. Atlanta will shift to a zone-blocking scheme, emphasizing fast and mobile linemen breaking open holes for an overhauled trio of backs.

Porous line play and Steven Jackson's career twilight hindered play-calling. Now rookie Tevin Coleman (2,036 yards and 15 TDs last year at Indiana) and Devonta Freeman will be expected to read blocks and break upfield. Still buried on the depth chart is the dangerous Antone Smith (10.3 yards per carry in two seasons as a backup). Smith has broken TD runs of 48 and 50 yards and could explode under Shanahan.

If Atlanta can run the ball with more efficiency and create balance, Ryan won't have to force throws and risk turnovers. It's hard to criticize Ryan's increase in interceptions post-2012, as he's been sacked 75 times in two years of 1,279 pass attempts. The unbalanced pass/run ratio has damaged the perception of Ryan as an elite quarterback.

Shanahan's a creative play-caller, but simply bumping the run game up to mediocre will free Jones and White more than any schematic. Free agent Leonard Hankerson and rookie Justin Hardy will complement one of the best receiving tandems in the league. While veteran Jacob Tamme isn't Gonzalez, he's more reliable as a weapon than blocking tight end Levine Toilolo.

DEFENSE Quinn has carte blanche with an awful defense — 27th in scoring, 21st in rushing, and last in passing and third-down conversions — so any experimentation is welcome.

The end of the Smith era brought rumblings of discord between the staff and front office, with the beleaguered pass rush at the heart of the matter. Smith and former DC Mike Nolan wanted to stop the run to force the pass, while Dimitroff longed for a prototypical pass rusher. Quinn's influence over the 2015 draft was inarguable, and Vic Beasley will almost certainly start at LEO, the end/linebacker weak-side rush position Seattle uses to great effect.

If Shanahan merely has to adjust and balance, Quinn and new defensive coordinator Raheem Morris have to perform a complete overhaul, and must do so with misfit parts. Smith and Nolan flirted with a transition to 3-4 looks in 2014, adding big bodies such as Paul Soliai and Ra'Shede Hageman to a rickety, aging 4-3 depth chart. The hybrid look was a total bust, and teams converted an astounding 46.8 percent of third downs.

NEW ERA

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

LIFELONG FAN Vic Beasley was elated to get the call from Atlanta in the first round of the 2015 NFL Draft: He grew up in Adairsville, Ga., cheering for the Falcons his entire life. Per Clemson's sports information department, Beasley is the first first-rounder to be drafted by a team less than 50 miles from his home since 1960. "I was hoping to still be there at (No.) 8, and I planned ahead," Beasley said during a press event. His plan ahead — a red-and-black-themed draft-day outfit.

ATLANTA'S FIRST FAMILY Beasley isn't alone in his Falcons fandom, as Clemson teammate and fellow draft pick Grady Jarrett is a Georgia native and the son of Falcons legend "The Hammer" Jessie Tuggle, a Falcons Ring of Honor member. Jarrett fell to the fifth round mainly because of his lack of size, but his father was famous for going from an undrafted free agent from Valdosta State to having his No. 58 jersey retired after a 14-year career that included five Pro Bowls.

ARMY STRONG Atlanta finished the 2015 draft without a second fullback on the roster to challenge Patrick DiMarco entering fall camp, so the Falcons picked up former Titans fullback Collin Mooney, a West Point graduate who signed with Tennessee following the fulfillment of his military obligations in 2012. If Mooney makes the 53-man roster, he'll be the first Army player on the Falcons roster in at least three decades. Mooney holds the Army record for rushing yards in a single season at 1,339 yards — a mark he holds by one yard following his final carry against Navy.

NOISE POLLUTION The Falcons organization paid a hefty fine — $350,000 — and lost a fifth-round pick in the 2016 draft after the NFL ruled that artificial noise was used during games at the Georgia Dome in 2013 and 2014. While some league insiders predicted a much harsher penalty, the loss of a fifth-rounder will affect an organization that frequently deals late round picks in the middle of the draft. For example, Atlanta traded its fifth- and sixth-round picks to move up for Jarrett in 2015.

Aside from Beasley, it's anyone's guess who makes the Opening Day front seven and how they'll position exactly. Hageman and former undrafted rookie middle linebacker Paul Worrilow might be the only returning names, as Quinn and Dimitroff pulled in a host of former Seahawks and other free agents who are a better fit for the new style. Former Tampa Bay defensive end Adrian Clayborn will likely start opposite Beasley, and former Cowboy Justin Durant is the favorite to replace the departed Sean Weatherspoon at weak-side linebacker.

Desmond Trufant isn't going anywhere, though: The third-year corner has quietly developed into one of the best in the league at his position. His size makes him a "Quinn guy," and the Falcons drafted Jalen Collins, another long, aggressive corner to groom as his counterpart. Free safety is a question mark, but veteran William Moore is expected to have recovered from multiple injuries and should reclaim the job at strong safety.

DESMOND TRUFANT, CB

A dramatic overhaul in philosophy and execution is needed. There is literally nowhere to go but up, and that's the best news possible.

SPECIALISTS Devin Hester might be the best free-agent signing of Dimitroff's career. The veteran was supposed to help bolster the Falcons' return game and instead lit the entire special teams and receiving corps on fire. Hester led the league in total kickoff return yardage (1,128, the only player to go over 1,000 last season thanks to an awful Falcons scoring defense) and averaged 13.3 yards per catch as a viable rotation receiver. Until Jones' deal is extended, Matt Bryant's new contract extension is easily the most important bit of front office business in 2015. Bryant hit 29-of-32 field goals and was perfect inside of 50 yards as he's remained one of the league's elite clutch kickers. Punter Matt Bosher's career 41.3-yard net average has made him one of the most reliable at his position.

FINAL ANALYSIS It's a distant memory now, but the Falcons were a possession away from locking up a Super Bowl trip two seasons ago. While it's hard to classify any team with elite quarterback play as a true rebuilding effort, the Falcons' long and horrific decline on defense might qualify them regardless of Ryan. Quinn has the bones of a terrific offense waiting on a defensive miracle, which is what he'll have provided if Atlanta makes the playoffs in 2015.

Multiple analysts agreed that the Falcons succeeded at finding value for need positions through each round. The much-maligned pass rush instantly improves with the addition of Vic Beasley, a likely Week 1 starter at Dan Quinn's LEO pass-rush position. Overshadowed in the Big Ten, running back Tevin Coleman was a one-man offense at Indiana and will challenge Devonta Freeman to become the starting running back. East Carolina's Justin Hardy set the FBS career record for receptions and will replace Harry Douglas as a slot and possession receiver. The undersized Grady Jarrett was considered a steal in the fifth round. He's an aggressive, big bodied defensive tackle who can play the one-gap and could eventually replace Justin Babineaux. Jalen Collins will enter the league already admitted to the NFL's substance-abuse program after a positive marijuana test. Drafting a player with a character question was a rare move by this organization, likely because Quinn values tall, long corners.

SCOUTING THE FALCONS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP ATLANTA "The lack of difference-making talent on this Falcons' roster cost head coach Mike Smith his job, so now the organization has shuffled the deck in the player personnel department and hired Dan Quinn from the Seahawks to fix the worst defense in the league. ... The heat is on because Matt Ryan does have franchise QB ability, but he will be entering his 10th season when Atlanta moves into a new stadium for the 2017 season. ... When healthy, Julio Jones is at the top of the league's wide receivers; however, the offensive line has been a total failure, and they still haven't found a top-shelf replacement for Tony Gonzalez at tight end. ... Third-round Indiana running back Tevin Coleman brings big speed to the table, and he should pair off well with Devonta Freeman. ... Amazingly, the defense is in worse shape. ... To upgrade the pressure issue, they drafted Clemson's Vic Beasley at No. 8 overall, and he should fit their coveted 'hybrid' DE/OLB spot. ... Corners Desmond Trufant and Robert Alford are OK, but neither has the height/weight/speed to contend with the giant-sized receivers in this division, so the club took a shot in the second round on LSU's Jalen Collins. ... None of their NFC South brethren has run off and dominated the division, so the Falcons have real hope that Quinn can engineer a quick turnaround."

In 2014, the Carolina Panthers did something no other team in the NFC South had done before — they repeated as division champs.

Now in 2015 they will try to extend that streak to three years, relying once more on a standout defense that is the strength of the team.

In the offseason, the Panthers tried to get faster and to get quarterback Cam Newton some help for an offense that often struggled a year ago. They hope to avoid the awful start they had in 2014, when they began the season 3–8–1 and looked likely to earn a top-10 draft pick. They then ripped off five straight wins — four in the regular season and one in the playoffs over Arizona — before falling to Seattle on the road in a divisional playoff game.

The Panthers let troubled defensive end Greg Hardy leave for Dallas in free agency, but they still have the best middle linebacker in the game in Luke Kuechly. Newton and Kuechly are the faces of the franchise and will again determine much of the team's fortunes in 2015.

OFFENSE The Panthers will remain a run-first offense in 2015. In the final five weeks of the 2014 regular season, Carolina ran for more yards than any other NFL team and went 4–1. That is the blueprint again this season. Bulldozer Jonathan Stewart will get the majority of the carries now that franchise leader DeAngelo Williams has been released. Newton is the Panthers' second-best running threat — he has always been a dual-threat quarterback, although he is trying to be smarter about not taking as many hits. Fullback Mike Tolbert regressed in 2014 but will be counted on in short-yardage situations. Rookie Cameron Artis-Payne will contend with scatback Fozzy Whittaker for many of the carries that Stewart doesn't get.

The most notable change on the offensive line comes at left tackle, where Michael Oher was signed to replace Byron Bell at one of the Panthers' problem positions. Oher was unsuccessful at his last stop in Tennessee, but the Panthers believe he still has enough in the tank to protect Newton. Center Ryan Kalil anchors the unit with professionalism and calm.

As for the passing game, it has to get more explosive. Tight end Greg Olsen and wide receiver Kelvin Benjamin each caught 1,008 yards worth of passes in 2014 — the first time since 1999 the Panthers had two 1,000-yard receivers. They will be the primary targets for Newton again this season. Olsen is a Pro Bowler who catches everything; Benjamin has some problems with drops but also has a knack for the spectacular.

But neither Olsen nor Benjamin are deep threats. The Panthers had success with Ted Ginn Jr. in that role in 2013, and after he disappointed in Arizona in 2014, they have re-signed him to do the same thing. Second-round draft pick Devin Funchess will play a lot early at the other wideout, but he's a big receiver with medium speed, similar to Benjamin. Corey Brown also will be counted on to run some deep routes, and Stephen Hill will get a chance, too. Second tight end Ed Dickson has good hands and, like Olsen, signed a new deal in the offseason.

As for Newton, he remains an incredible athlete and has become a much better leader. But he still has occasional problems with his accuracy and throwing mechanics. Unlike 2014, however, Newton has been healthy throughout the offseason, which should help.

DEFENSE It starts with the linebackers — Carolina believes it may have the best tandem in the game in Kuechly and Thomas Davis. Those two never come off the field, and they chase down so many plays from sideline to sideline that potential 20-yard gains for the opposition are often getting turned into 4-yard plays. Kuechly's form tackling should be studied by every youth football player.

Shaq Thompson, the team's first-round draft pick, is a versatile athlete (he also gained 456 yards as a running back in his last year at Washington) who may start at weak-side linebacker right away over A.J. Klein — if Thompson can show he has the strength to get off blocks.

The defensive front loses Hardy, but it didn't have the erratic defensive end for 15 games in 2014, either, due to a domestic violence issue. Second-year end Kony Ealy will need to step up his game to help replace Hardy, with Wes Horton and Mario Addison also helping out. The other defensive end, Charles Johnson, is winding down his career but is still a bull-rushing force when single-blocked. Defensive tackle Star Lotulelei was not a star in 2014 after a great rookie year, and the Panthers need a more consistent performance from him in his third season. Kawann Short may be poised for a breakout season at the other defensive tackle spot.

The secondary was the team's weak spot for most of last season and remains a little iffy. Cornerback Josh Norman is emerging as one of the best cover corners in the NFC, but

NEW ERA

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

THE BLIND SIDE Michael Oher, the subject of the book and movie "The Blind Side," has joined Carolina and is penciled in at starting left tackle. He says his new teammates have not gotten to know him well enough yet to tease him about Sandra Bullock or anything else. "I'm pretty sure," Oher says, "once everyone gets to know me, they'll start making fun of me."

THANKSGIVING DAY For the first time in their 21-year history, the Panthers will play on Thanksgiving Day, going to Dallas for a Nov. 26 game. That 4:30 p.m. ET contest will feature numerous storylines, possibly including Oher blocking his former high school teammate, Greg Hardy.

LIVING IN A SHED Fifth-round draft pick David Mayo once lived in a shed behind a house for a year while he went to junior college in California because rent was so expensive. Mayo says he paid $450 per month, slept on a mattress and ran an extension cord to the house to get a power supply.

TWO MEN OF THE YEAR The Panthers have a rarity on defense — they will boast the last two Walter Payton NFL Man of the Year award winners this season. The award is given for community service and playing excellence. Thomas Davis won it in 2014; new Panther Charles Tillman won it while with Chicago in 2013.

SHAQ ATTACK New Panther linebacker Shaq Thompson was named for former NBA star Shaquille O'Neal, although he says his mother was not a big basketball fan.

CAM NO. 2 Fifth-round draft pick Cameron Artis-Payne has always gone by "Cam," but when he got to Auburn he switched that to "CAP" (his initials) because everyone thought of Cam Newton when they heard "Cam." Now after following Newton into the NFL as well, though, Artis-Payne says he's going to "introduce myself as Cam and we'll see where it goes from there."

HARPER'S HAIR Starting safety Roman Harper, 32, has more gray hair than almost any player in the NFL. And he doesn't care. "I rock the gray hair, man," Harper says. "I got my first gray hair when I was in seventh grade — my barber showed it to me — so I've been actually been graying the majority of my life. I had it in high school a little bit. I had it throughout college. I've had it forever, and it's part of who I am. It's part of my strength."

DECEMBERS TO REMEMBER The Panthers have frequently started slowly under coach Ron Rivera, but they are 15–3 in December since he became the team's head coach in 2011. That's tied for the best December record in the NFL during that span.

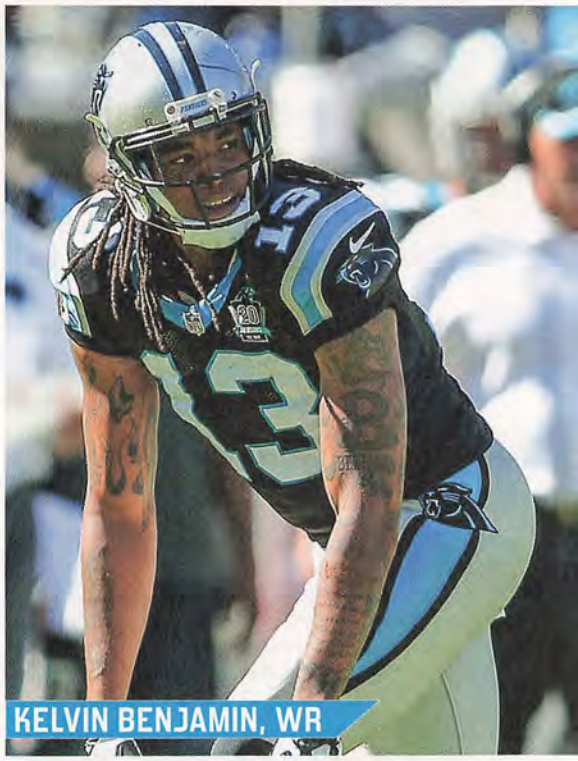
the second corner spot may need to be filled by Charles "Peanut" Tillman if he can still run fast enough to do it. Bene Benwikere is more naturally suited to the nickel cornerback role and will play there. Safety Roman Harper has lost a step but is still crafty. Free safety Tre Boston has speed but makes too many youthful mistakes.

Carolina is one of only three NFL teams to boast a top-10 defense in each of the past three seasons (Seattle and San Francisco are the others). If the Panthers are going to make the playoffs again, they will need a fourth straight year in the top 10.



KELVIN BENJAMIN, WR

SPECIALISTS Carolina took a step back in 2014 on special teams, and it cost the team several times. Most notably, the Panthers had two punts blocked — and both ended up going for Minnesota touchdowns in a nasty loss to the Vikings. General manager Dave Gettleman made a point in the offseason of signing several players who will be contributors on the coverage and return units and also brought back Ginn to return punts. Kicker Graham Gano had the best touchback percentage in the league last season (77.2) and has such a strong leg that a 65-yard field goal is not out of the question — although he did miss a couple of key field goals last year. Punter Brad Nortman and long snapper J.J. Jansen are solid.

FINAL ANALYSIS The Panthers are fortunate to play in a division without a great team, and the early part of the schedule looks soft enough that they should start at least 3–1. An Oct. 18 road trip to Seattle — the team that has been the Panthers' bugaboo ever since Russell Wilson arrived — will be critical.

Newton's play will be as important as ever, but the Panthers also need at least one more playmaker on offense and hope Funchess can be that guy. A stout defense will keep Carolina in nearly every game. This is a team that should contend for a third straight playoff berth but will need to improve offensively if it is going to advance far in the postseason.

The Panthers hope that Shaq Thompson follows a similar path to Thomas Davis, who played multiple positions in college before settling in as a star outside linebacker. Devin Funchess, a tight end earlier in his career at Michigan, gives the Panthers their second big body at wideout, although his speed is questionable. Still, Funchess could open the season in the starting lineup. Daryl Williams may have been a steal in the fourth round — Carolina sent three picks to Oakland to get him — and will have a shot at beating out Mike Remmers at right tackle. David Mayo will need to make a mark on special teams early, while Cameron Artis-Payne, who does not have blazing speed but runs well inside, will get his shot as Jonathan Stewart's backup. He rushed for 1,608 yards as a senior at Auburn.

SCOUTING THE PANTHERS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP CAROLINA "Carolina took a step back in 2014 after the retirement of left tackle Jordan Gross and the free-agent departure of wide receiver Steve Smith. However, the entire division got worse, so the Panthers got into the playoffs and actually won a game. ... Cam Newton was harassed and hit all year behind a porous offensive line and then capped the season with a near-tragic car accident. ... 2014 No. 1 pick Kelvin Benjamin showed that he was far more advanced than people expected and looks like a future star. ... Tight end Greg Olsen has quietly enjoyed a very productive NFL career after being traded from Chicago in July 2011. ... The Greg Hardy legal situation drained the entire organization on and off the field, and while he spent almost the entire season on the commissioner's exempt list, the Panthers still managed to finish 10th in total defense. ... Their front seven is strong with legit interior defensive linemen and all-star linebackers Luke Kuechly and Thomas Davis. ... The secondary survived due to the emergence of two rookies: corner Bene Benwikere and strong safety Tre Boston, but surprisingly, the entire unit was not addressed in the draft. ... With Newton and Kuechly as the cornerstones, Carolina will always contend for division honors. The question is, can they improve enough everywhere else to challenge for a Super Bowl?"

As long as Drew Brees is the quarterback, the Saints will always have a shot to win the NFC South and make the playoffs. But rivals have passed the Saints in other areas, and it all caught up to them in 2014. Team officials realized they couldn't continue to rely on Brees to simply outscore opponents with his dazzling passing skills. So they conducted an eyebrow-raising roster overhaul in the offseason in an effort to bolster their aging offensive line and flagging defense. The Saints are counting on more new faces than they have in a long time and are something of a mystery team in the NFC race.

OFFENSE The names change, but the production should remain prolific. Even without Jimmy Graham and Kenny Stills, look for the Saints to continue to rank among the league leaders in yards and points. Since coach Sean Payton and Brees arrived in 2006, the Saints have finished no worse than sixth in total offense and 12th in scoring offense. At 36, Brees has started to show signs of age, but he's still highly effective when not asked to do too much and given time in the pocket to find his receivers. Look for Brees to spread the ball around more without the dynamic Graham in the lineup. The Saints have no one on the roster with Graham's physical skill set, and his absence will challenge Payton's play-calling creativity, especially in the red zone, where an alley-oop to Graham meant an automatic six points the past few seasons.

The Saints are high on athletic third-year tight end Josh Hill. He showed big-play ability in a limited role last season, when five of his 14 receptions went for touchdowns. Speedy Brandin Cooks was extremely productive as a rookie before breaking his thumb. He'll be called on to produce more explosive plays with Graham and Stills gone. Young veterans Nick Toon, Joe Morgan, Seantavius Jones and Brandon Coleman will compete for spots in the rotation.

Until the passing attack sorts itself out, Brees can lean on a reliable run game that ranked ninth in the NFL in average yards per carry (4.5). With Mark Ingram, C.J. Spiller and Khiry Robinson in the backfield, the running game should be a strength. Ingram is coming off his finest season as a pro and is firmly entrenched as the lead back. Spiller was signed in free agency to play the satellite back role in which Reggie Bush and Darren Sproles excelled from 2006-13. The powerful Robinson is one of the most difficult backs in the league to tackle.

All of this firepower will go for naught if the offensive line doesn't improve. The unit had been one of the most consistent in the NFL over the years but started to show its age last season. Brees was sacked 29 times and often hurried into crucial interceptions. To that end, the Saints acquired veteran center Max Unger in the Graham trade and selected tackle Andrus Peat in the first round of the NFL Draft. Peat is probably a year away from seeing the field, with the athletic Terron Armstead and the underrated Zach Strief bookending the line at tackle. But Unger, a former Pro Bowler, will be an immediate upgrade at center. Right guard is the lone question mark. Former undrafted free agent Tim Lelito will get the first crack to replace Ben Grubbs. He'll need to stay healthy, because there is little experience behind him.

DEFENSE Whatever pixie dust coordinator Rob Ryan had in his glorious debut season, he ran out of in 2014 as the Saints plummeted from No. 4 to No. 31 in total defense. Payton has given him the chance to right the ship but brought in former Raiders head coach and Broncos defensive coordinator Dennis Allen to assist him. The Saints were plagued by blown coverage assignments and alignment errors early last season and never recovered.

The top offseason priority will be improving the play of the team's talented but underperforming defensive line. Ends Akiem Hicks and Cameron Jordan are both due for rebound seasons after disappointing in 2014. Hicks has the physical skills to dominate opponents but is frustratingly inconsistent. He could be facing a make-or-break season. Likewise, Jordan failed to make enough big plays and now enters a contract season with an uncertain future. The team's best pass rusher, outside linebacker Junior Galette, was rewarded with a four-year, $40 million contract early in 2014, then lost the trust of team officials because of off-field transgressions. He has explosive burst but is undersized and can be overpowered at the point of attack. Brodrick Bunkley and John Jenkins form a powerful one-two punch at nose guard.

The linebacker unit needs work. Three rookies and veterans Anthony Spencer and Dannell Ellerbee were acquired in the offseason in an effort to bolster the unit. Only veteran David Hawthorne, who replaces Curtis Lofton as the play-caller inside, appears locked into a starting spot. Rookie sparkplug Hau'oli Kikaha will platoon with veteran Parys Haralson on the FAMILY MAN Doniel Gambrell is not your average undrafted free agent. The 24-year-old offensive lineman is married with three kids. He worked a second- and third-shift job throughout his senior season at Notre Dame College in South Euclid, Ohio, to support his family. Once people learn his feel-good story, Gambrell will be a guy Saints fans root for to make the roster. "He's been a full-time father, a full-time husband, a full-time student, a full-time athlete and a full-time worker," Bill Rychel, the offensive coordinator and assistant head coach at Notre Dame, told the New Orleans Times-Picayune. "He knows what he wants and has worked hard for it."

DRAFT DROUGHT ENDED When the Saints took Colorado State quarterback Garrett Grayson in the third round of the NFL Draft they ended an amazing streak. Grayson is the first quarterback drafted by the Saints in the first three rounds since the club selected Archie Manning in Round 1 back in 1971.

ILLINOIS CONNECTION Saints first-round draft pick Andrus Peat and head coach Sean Payton have an odd connection. Payton and Peat's father, Todd, went on a recruiting visit to Northern Illinois together when the two were high school seniors in Illinois. Todd Peat was an offensive tackle at Champagne Central High School and later played in the NFL for the Cardinals and Raiders. Payton was a star quarterback at Naperville Central who eventually signed with Eastern Illinois.

SPILLER, LEWIS IN THAT NUMBER Keenan Lewis showed that he was a team player during the offseason by surrendering his No. 28 jersey to new running back C.J. Spiller. Spiller wore No. 28 with the Buffalo Bills. "Twenty-eight meant a lot to Spiller, and I respect that. I'm not selfish, a team guy," wrote Lewis on his Instagram site. Lewis said he'd buy a new jersey for fans who have his old jersey and a receipt.

HOMETOWN HERO Rookie defensive tackle Kaleb Eulls is a long shot to make the roster, but he's already a hero in his home state of Mississippi for a celebrated act of heroism as a high school senior. Eulls saved a bus full of high school classmates when he disarmed a troubled female student who was brandishing a pistol and threatening harm. Eulls averted a potential tragedy by steering students out of the emergency exit at the back of the bus then tackling the girl and dislodging the handgun when she became distracted.

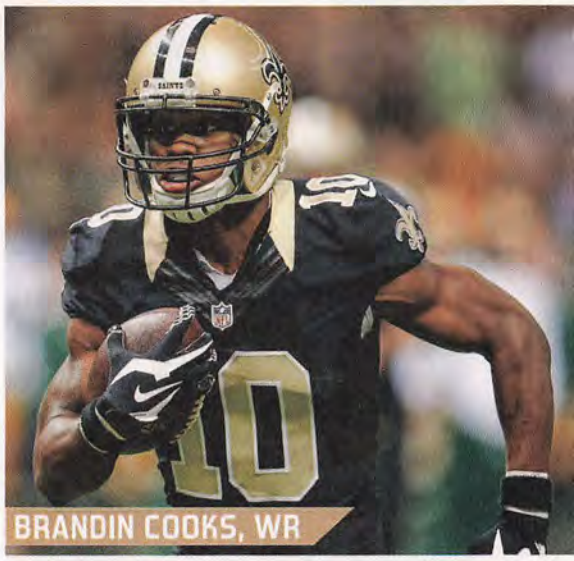
strong side. The staff loves his intensity and pass-rush ability. Hulking rookie Stephone Anthony is the kind of physical thumper Ryan has longed for since he arrived in 2013. He'll compete with Ellerbe at the other inside spot.

The return to health of veteran free safety Jairus Byrd will go a long way toward improving the leaky secondary. The former Pro Bowler should be motivated for a big season after his injury-riddled debut in New Orleans. His center field skills free up Kenny Vaccaro to play the joker role in which he thrived as a rookie.

The No. 2 cornerback spot riddled the Saints last season, and they hope veteran free agent Brandon Browner can fill the role opposite Keenan Lewis. The success of Ryan's scheme relies on strong press coverage.



BRANDIN COOKS, WR

There's an army of candidates but few proven commodities beyond Browner and Lewis. Rookies P.J. Williams and Damian Swann will compete with former Jets first-round washout Kyle Wilson for the nickel spot. CFL import Delvin Breaux is the sleeper in the group. Second-year men Brian Dixon and Stanley Jean-Baptiste are also in the mix.

SPECIALISTS Thomas Morstead remains one of the most consistently productive punters and kickoff specialists in the league. He's the strength of an otherwise nondescript special teams group. Jalen Saunders and rookie Marcus Murphy will try to spice up the club's moribund return units. The Saints haven't returned a punt or a kickoff for a touchdown since 2011. Veteran placekicker Shayne Graham has lost a bit of leg strength over his 14-year career but is remarkably consistent inside of 40 yards. He'll have to fight off a challenge from strong-legged Dustin Hopkins during training camp.

FINAL ANALYSIS Look for the Saints to bounce back from their disappointing 2014 campaign. How far back remains to be seen. The best thing they have going for them is the mediocre competition in the NFC South. If the defensive changes work, the Saints can resume their winning ways and challenge the Falcons and Panthers for the division title. But there are more questions than answers on both sides of the ball, and a lot of things will have to fall into place for them to regain their status as title contenders in the NFC. They'll be competitive as usual but are a cut below the conference's elite.

The Saints wanted to improve their defense and used six of nine picks on defenders, the most they used on that side of the ball since the league went to a seven-round draft format in 1994. Stephone Anthony has the size and intensity Rob Ryan likes in his inside linebackers and could see the field early if he can master the defensive scheme. Hau'oli Kikaha will challenge Parys Haralson for the starting spot on the strong side and should see immediate snaps in sub-packages because of his stellar pass-rush skills. Andrus Peat is the eventual replacement for Zach Strief at right tackle and provides insurance at both tackle spots in case of injury. P.J. Williams and Damian Swann will compete with veteran Kyle Wilson for the starting nickel back position. Marcus Murphy will battle Jalen Saunders for the return specialist position.

SCOUTING THE SAINTS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP NEW ORLEANS "On paper, the Saints made a financial commitment for the 2014 season that was going to put them in position to challenge for a Super Bowl championship. Instead, they finished 7–9 and found themselves $30M over the salary cap heading into 2015. ... After all the contract angst about tight end Jimmy Graham last year, they traded him to Seattle on the eve of free agency for a first-round pick and center Max Unger. The offensive line still has guard Jahri Evans, and they drafted Stanford tackle Andrus Peat with the No. 13 overall selection. ... Wide receiver Kenny Stills was shipped to Miami and, from afar, it appears that he and Graham were not on the same page with the face of the franchise (Drew Brees). ... The defense hit rock bottom in nearly every statistical category, and it all began with the knee injury to Jairus Byrd after four games. ... The Rob Ryan scheme never generated the chaos needed to create fumbles and interceptions, and the Saints finished the year with a minus-13 turnover margin. ... If defensive end Cameron Jordan and outside linebacker Junior Galette can return to form, and Byrd and fellow safety Kenny Vaccaro bounce back from their injuries, with the addition of corner Brandon Browner to counter the big receivers in this division, New Orleans could bounce back in a big way in 2015."

MIKE EVANS, WR

The morning of the NFL Draft, Bucs general manager Jason Licht took a walk around the team's three practice fields completely at peace with the decision to select Florida State quarterback Jameis Winston with the No. 1 overall pick.

"It's like your wedding day," Licht says. "Without the cold feet."

For better or worse — and some would lean toward the latter — the Bucs' fortunes and those of Licht and coach Lovie Smith are married to Winston, one of the most polarizing picks in modern NFL Draft history. A civil suit stemming from allegations of a sexual assault for which Winston was never charged, along with a series of relatively minor acts of immaturity, follow the mercurial former Seminole to the NFL.

But the Bucs decision-makers are more than satisfied with Winston's character after doing research that included conducting exhaustive interviews of more than 75 people.

"If he wasn't a good guy, we wouldn't have used a first pick on him," Licht says.

On the field, Winston has few peers. He went 26–1 as a starting quarterback at Florida State, and he won the Heisman Trophy and a national championship.

"I would just ask our fans to give him a chance," Smith says.

OFFENSE The Bucs believe Winston is a transformational quarterback who will eventually put them on equal footing with the other gunslingers in the NFC South — the Saints' Drew Brees, the Falcons' Matt Ryan and the Panthers' Cam Newton.

Winston is a plug-and-play talent who comes from a pro-style offense. He can check protections, read the defense and get through all the progressions. Perhaps more impressive, Winston can make any throw on the field.

The key is whether the Bucs can find a way to protect him. Tampa Bay allowed 52 sacks last season, tied for the third-most in the NFL. That's why Licht invested a pair of second-round picks on Penn State left tackle Donovan Smith and guard Ali Marpet from Division III Hobart College. Both are projected to start as rookies. But the Bucs must get better performances from holdovers such as center Evan Dietrich-Smith, guard Logan Mankins and tackle Demar Dotson.

Winston does have 6'5" targets in Mike Evans and Vincent Jackson, a pair of 1,000-yard receivers. Evans was a Rookie of the Year candidate despite missing most of the offseason with a hamstring strain. He had a monster three-game stretch in November in which he caught 21 passes for 458 yards and five touchdowns. Second-year tight end Austin Seferian-Jenkins missed the final four games of 2014 with a back injury but shows the ability to get downfield. He caught 21 passes for 221 yards but is capable of much more.

The Bucs decided not to pick up the fifth-year option on running back Doug Martin, who has played only 17 games in the last two years after rushing for 1,454 yards and 11 touchdowns as a rookie. Martin doesn't seem to be versatile or physical enough to fit Smith's preference of running style, but at least he will be motivated in a contract year. The Bucs plan to increase the workload for Charles Sims, who missed the first half of his rookie season with an ankle injury. He showed more promise as pass catcher than runner. Licht attempted to upgrade the speed and athleticism on offense, beginning with the two linemen and Nebraska receiver Kenny Bell.

One of the biggest additions to the Bucs attack is offensive coordinator Dirk Koetter, who hung 56 points on Smith last season while operating the Falcons offense. Smith and the Bucs were dealt a setback with the loss of offensive coordinator Jeff Tedford, who never returned after a heart procedure, but Koetter is more than a stopgap replacement, and he has a spread-the-field passer in Winston like he had in Matt Ryan.

But make no mistake. The offense will develop as quickly as Winston does.

DEFENSE The Bucs struggled in the first year of Smith's Tampa 2 scheme. After six weeks, opponents were averaging 34 points per game. That prompted the beginning of an overhaul that will continue through 2015.

The foundation is defensive tackle Gerald McCoy, who led the team with 8.5 sacks, and linebacker Lavonte David, who has the distinction of being an All-Pro (2013) before making a Pro Bowl. McCoy needs help and got some with the waiver claim of Jacquies Smith, who had 6.5 sacks in seven starts last season. The Bucs traded a fifth-round pick to the Lions for defensive end George Johnson, giving them another edge rusher to complement McCoy.

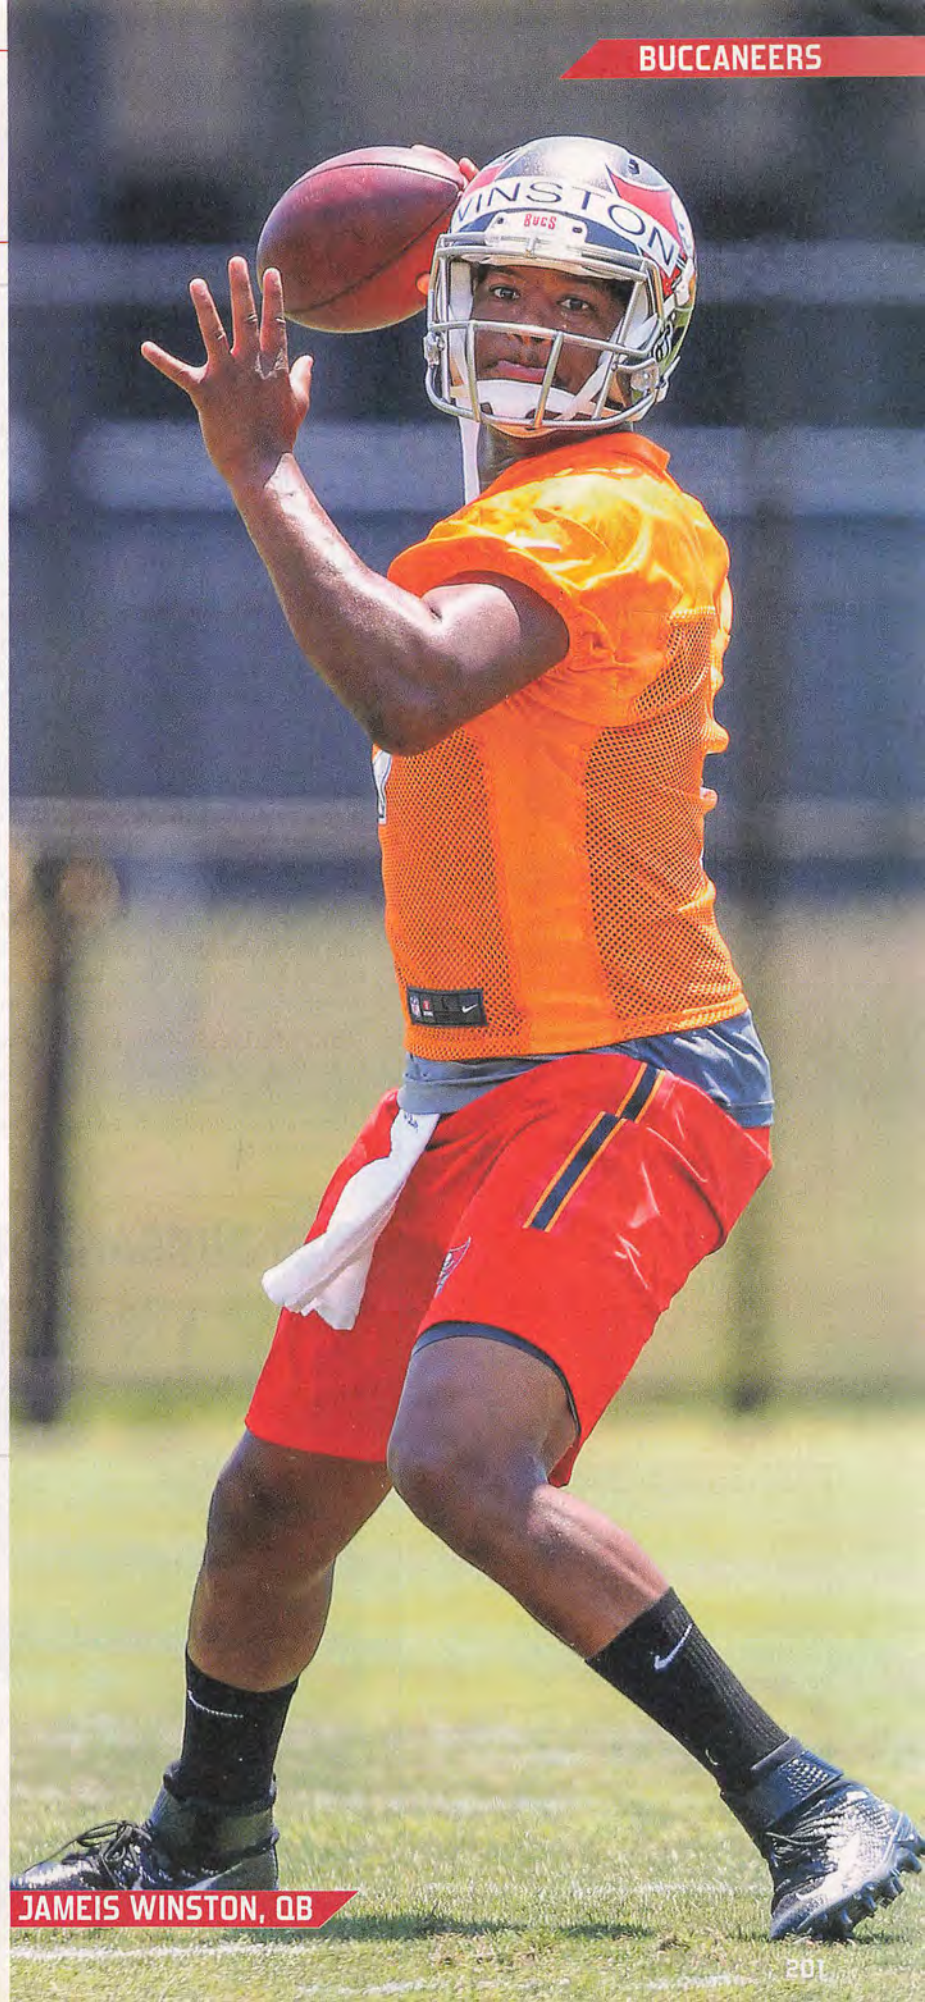
NEW ERA



JAMEIS WINSTON, QB

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

STAY IN THE POCKET Of the two high-profile quarterbacks at the top of this year's draft, Mike Evans says he preferred Jameis Winston to Marcus Mariota because Winston delivers the ball from the pocket, even though Evans caught passes from scrambling quarterback Johnny Manziel while the two were at Texas A&M. "I did my time with a mobile quarterback, and that was fun," Evans says. "It was fun, it got me more opportunities for more balls on scramble routes and stuff like that. But in this league, it's tough to scramble. I think Jameis will be fine."

DANCING BEAR Rookie tackle Donovan Smith prides himself on his athleticism despite being 338 pounds, and his light feet earned an interesting description from his college coach, Penn State boss James Franklin. "He's like a dancing bear," Franklin says. "He played for us at up to 350 pounds. I think at one point he was 352, but he has really, really light feet. Based on his feet and his movement, you would never know that."

ONE MORE YARD Utah rookie wide receiver/kick returner Kaelin Clay led the FBS with four return touchdowns. But he may best be known for dropping the football a yard shy of the end zone on a long reception against Oregon. The Ducks returned the fumble for a touchdown to tie the game 7–7, a 14-point swing in a game that Oregon went on to win 51–27. Clay feels the incident made him mentally tougher. "Going back to that play, it was actually probably my favorite play," Clay told the Tampa media following his selection. "Things aren't always going to go the way you want them to go. It's how you get through adversity."

NEW BEGINNING Winston says he chose to wear jersey No. 3 with the Bucs because that was the first jersey number he ever wore, way back when he played for the Bessemer Tigers as a child. "I just look at it as a new beginning," Winston says. Also, add up No. 3 with No. 5 (his number at FSU) and you get No. 8 — his jersey number at Hueytown (Ala.) High School.

KEEP IT IN CHECK Lavonte David says a strong locker room will welcome Winston, but he may have to check his off-field antics. "We've got some veteran guys who could pull him to the side and make him understand that there's a role he has to play once he comes in, and sometimes you may have to tone that down," David says.

LAST TIME Bucs GM Jason Licht on the 2–14 season in 2014: "I'll never get over it. It'll be a driving force for years to come. I never want to go through that again."

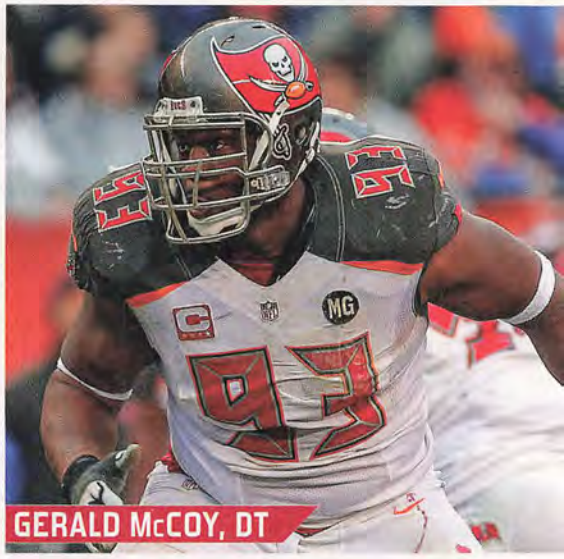
The Bucs also changed their philosophy in free agency. They pulled off the Band Aid by cutting high-priced free agent busts — such as Michael Johnson after only one season — and replaced them on defense with players who have a history of success in Smith's defense or the Tampa 2 scheme.

Safety Chris Conte and defensive tackle Henry Melton both played for Smith in Chicago. Looking for more playmaking ability at middle linebacker, the Bucs signed former Cowboy Bruce Carter, who had five interceptions last season. They used a fourth-round pick on LSU linebacker Kwon Alexander, another run-and-hit machine with speed.

The secondary is solid with cornerbacks Alterraun Verner and Johnathan Banks. Banks led the team with four interceptions, and Verner, a former fourth-round pick of the Titans, was an under-the-radar free-agent acquisition last offseason. In addition to the rangy Conte, the Bucs believe the future is bright for strong safety Bradley McDougald, who took over following the trade of Mark Barron to the Rams.



GERALD McCOY, DT

SPECIALISTS Smith's teams in Chicago were known for winning games on special teams. That's hardly been the case in Tampa Bay, which struggled to settle on a kick returner. That's why they drafted Utah's Kaelin Clay, who had four returns for touchdowns last season to lead college football. The punt and kickoff return jobs are his to lose. Punter Michael Koenen is in the final year of his contract that pays him $3.75 million. But his pay didn't match his production as he ranked 29th with a 37.1-yard net average. The Bucs' placekicking game is solid behind Patrick Murray, who was 5-of-6 from 50-plus yards, including a long of 55. Overall, Murray made 20-of-24 field goals but is capable of more. The kick coverage teams should be improved with the addition of some athletic linebackers and receivers who have specialized as gunners such as Bell.

FINAL ANALYSIS Winston has the talent and confidence to be a frontrunner for Rookie of the Year. But until the Bucs improve around him, he won't be enough to make them real contenders in the NFC South. The season opener against the Titans and Marcus Mariota offers a juicy storyline. But Winston has to be dedicated on and off the field to make this gamble pay off.

7.	Joey Iosefa	FB	6-0	247	Hawaii

As the No. 1 overall pick, Jameis Winston is clearly the centerpiece of the Bucs' plans moving forward. To put his importance in perspective, the Bucs have never had a quarterback taken in the first round who made it to a second contract, a list that includes Doug Williams, Steve Young, Vinny Testaverde, Trent Dilfer and Josh Freeman. Winston went 26–1 as a college starter and won the Heisman Trophy and a national title; he's more accomplished than Cam Newton when Newton entered the league. Donovan Smith and Ali Marpet will have to grow up with their quarterback. Kenny Bell and Kaelin Clay upgrade the speed on offense and the return game. Finally, as the only defensive player drafted in the Lovie Smith-Jason Licht era, Kwon Alexander will make a strong challenge to start at strong-side linebacker. It's another offense-heavy draft class, which is understandable, considering that the Bucs had the 30th-ranked offense in the league a year ago.

SCOUTING THE BUCCANEERS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP TAMPA BAY "After a disastrous 2–14 campaign, veterans Josh McCown, Anthony Collins and Michael Johnson were released, and Tampa Bay appears ready to start over with top pick Jameis Winston as the central figure in the rebuilding efforts. ... He will have the ability to play 'above the rim' with oversized wide receivers Vincent Jackson and Mike Evans on the perimeter, but someone needs to emerge as a slot receiver, and the offensive line has to be better than last year's horrid group that contributed to the Bucs being 29th in rushing offense and tied for 29th in sacks allowed. ... Penn State tackle Donovan Smith and Hobart College guard Ali Marpet were both selected in the second round, so that's a start to constructing a pocket for Winston, who needs room to operate because of his leggy build and one-speed athleticism. ... Dirk Koetter is the new offensive coordinator, and he will be tasked to maximize the abilities of tight end Austin Seferian-Jenkins, who flashed as a rookie. ... Defensively, tackle Gerald McCoy and linebacker Lavonte David are Pro Bowl-caliber players, but no one else must be game-planned for by opponent offenses. ... The pass rush was not addressed in the draft, so George Johnson (trade with Lions) and Jacquies Smith will enter camp as the opening-day starters."

There may not be a better general manager/head coach tandem in the NFL than what the Cardinals have with GM Steve Keim and coach Bruce Arians. In just two years, they've completely transformed the franchise, in terms of both perception and results. But the Cardinals are in a tricky place. Their window to win is small given the age (35) and injury history of quarterback Carson Palmer. Also, Larry Fitzgerald will be 32 when the season begins. Arizona suffered significant losses on defense in the offseason, the most notable being defensive coordinator Todd Bowles, who left to become the head coach of the New York Jets. Bowles' blitzing schemes were widely credited for Arizona's sum being better than its parts. Given those losses — and Palmer's knees — it's tempting to write off the Cardinals. But the Keim/Arians combo engenders more trust — and faith — than any front office in franchise history. Doubt them at your own risk.

OFFENSE Arizona's offense comes with a big if: If Palmer can stay healthy, the Cardinals should be a productive if not particularly high-scoring offense. The drop-off from Palmer to back-up Drew Stanton is steep; Stanton simply isn't as accurate and doesn't throw the deep ball as well as Palmer.

Palmer isn't the most mobile of quarterbacks but shouldn't have to be given the resources the Cardinals have put into the offensive line. The addition of Pro Bowl guard Mike Iupati and the expected development of former first-round draft pick Jonathan Cooper should fortify what was a weakness last year, the interior of the line.

The line's improvement also should bode well for the Cardinals' running game, which took a hit last season when Andre Ellington went down with a knee injury in Week 1 and then was lost for the season in early December due to a hernia. When healthy, Ellington is a game-changer, capable of going long every time he touches the ball. Ellington's only drawback is his size. He's not built to carry the ball 20 to 25 times per game or thrive in short-yardage situations. The Cardinals hoped to land either Melvin Gordon or Todd Gurley in the draft to complement Ellington, but both were long gone by the team's 24th overall pick. Arizona needs either Stepfan Taylor or third-round pick David Johnson from Northern Iowa to step up and carry the ball 10 to 12 times per game. That would help keep Ellington fresh — and dangerous — over the course of the season.

If Palmer stays healthy — there's that "if" again — the wide receivers should be a strength. Fitzgerald was on pace for a 1,000-yard season in 2014 before Palmer got hurt; without the starting QB he was ineffective and sometimes ignored. Fitzgerald is no longer one of the NFL's elite receivers, but he can still be a productive No. 1 wideout for a playoff team. Michael Floyd is still too inconsistent heading into his fourth season — there are weeks he disappears — but he still had 841 yards and six touchdowns last year. Like Fitzgerald, he needs Palmer to stay upright. John Brown provides the deep threat. He averaged 14.5 yards per reception last year, his first in the league.

DEFENSE Talk about a unit that suffered some big losses. Bowles left to become a head coach. Defensive end Darnell Dockett, who missed the 2014 season with a knee injury but still was a team leader, signed as a free agent with San Francisco, and nose tackle Dan Williams joined the Oakland Raiders. Inside linebacker Larry Foote retired, and cornerback Antonio Cromartie joined Bowles with the Jets.

The biggest problem — besides losing Bowles' innovative mind — is the lack of an edge pass rusher. The Cardinals had just 35 sacks last year and didn't have a single player in double digits. The draft didn't provide any immediate help, so improvement will have to come from within. The onus falls on defensive end Calais Campbell to become a dominant player. He has his moments — he had seven sacks last year — but there are too many weeks where he's not a factor.

Williams' loss can't be overstated. He was playing at a Pro Bowl level late in the 2014 season, and no one on the current roster can duplicate his abilities. With the Cardinals also being vulnerable at inside linebacker with Foote's retirement, teams might be able to exploit Arizona up the middle in the run game. The Cardinals signed Sean Weatherspoon to replace Foote, but he's been injury-prone his entire career, only once playing a full 16-game season.

The strength of the defense will be the secondary, even with Cromartie's departure. Patrick Peterson had a rough 2014, but some of his issues can be attributed to the discovery that

NEW ERA

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

SHAQ ATTACK First-round pick D.J. Humphries has been compared to former NBA great Shaquille O'Neal not only because of his size — Humphries is 6'5" and 307 pounds — but also because of his outgoing personality. Humphries already has given himself a Shaq-like nickname: "Big Little Cactus."

A LIFER Few players spend an entire career with one team, but Larry Fitzgerald may be the exception. After months of speculation that Fitzgerald and the Cardinals wouldn't be able to agree on an extension that would provide the team cap relief, Fitzgerald signed a four-year deal (it voids after two years) that guarantees him $11 million over two years. Fitzgerald will be 34 when the deal expires.

ROAD GRADER One of the Cardinals' weaknesses in 2014 was their running game in short-yardage situations. Arizona felt it needed to get stronger along the interior of its offensive line, so it aggressively went after Mike Iupati in free agency, signing the former San Francisco 49er to a massive five-year, $40 million deal. Iupati has pass protection issues, but he can certainly clear a path in front of him.

HUGE INVESTMENT For years the Cardinals had one of the worst offensive lines in the league, in part because of poor draft decisions, but also because the team didn't invest in the position in free agency. But that's changed under general manager Steve Keim. Since Arizona drafted guard Jonathan Cooper with its first-round pick in 2013, it has spent nearly $100 million to bolster the line.

FIGHTING THE GOOD FIGHT Cornerback Patrick Peterson had a poor first half of the 2014 season — at least by his standards — but the reason became clear after season's end. Peterson divulged that he was diagnosed with diabetes, and it wasn't until October that he learned how to deal with the issue. The Cardinals expect Peterson to be back to his normal self this year.

VETERAN ADDITIONS The Cardinals took some low-risk gambles in free agency on linebackers Sean Weatherspoon and LaMarr Woodley. Weatherspoon has been hurt much of his career and didn't play in 2014, while Woodley didn't have a sack in six games with Oakland.

WHO'S IN CHARGE The Cardinals lost two of their defensive leaders when defensive end Darnell Dockett and cornerback Antonio Cromartie signed with San Francisco and the N.Y. Jets, respectively. Arizona wants seven-year veteran Calais Campbell not only to be more consistent but also to take the leadership baton from Dockett.

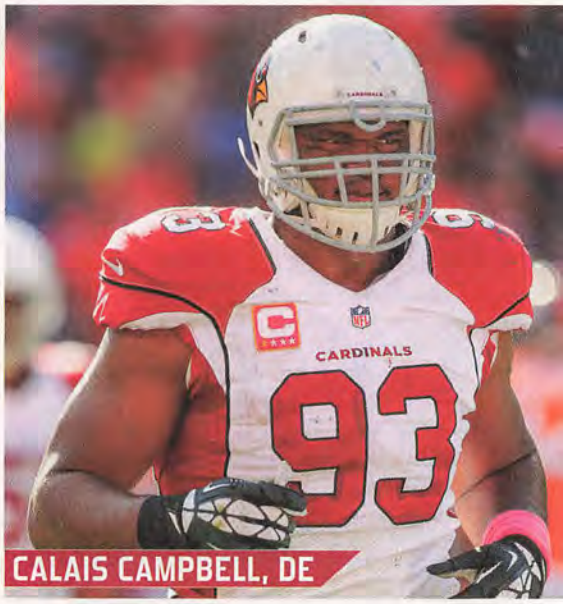
he has diabetes. Assuming he has the disease under control, he should revert back to being one of the best corners in the game. Arizona also believes Justin Bethel, who's been a special-teams demon, and Jerraud Powers can more than make up for Cromartie's absence. Arizona could have one of the best safety tandems in the league with Tyrann Mathieu and Deone Bucannon. Mathieu is a ball hawk who also will light up receivers, and Bucannon excels against the run. He's also an effective pass rusher, particularly when the Cardinals blitz.



CALAIS CAMPBELL, DE

SPECIALISTS The Cardinals' kicking game is in good hands. The same can't be said yet for the kick returners. Placekicker Chandler Catanzaro had a brilliant rookie season, making 29-of-33 field-goal attempts, including 12-of-14 from 40 yards plus. He could find his way to the Pro Bowl at some point in the near future. Punter Dave Zastudil should be back after a 2014 season that was lost to a nagging groin injury. He led the league in punts inside the 20 in 2013 and '12. Arizona needs to find someone who can give its return game some pop. Peterson could return punts, but the Cardinals are hesitant to let such a valuable every-down player expose himself to injury on special teams. Look for rookie receiver J.J. Nelson to get a shot. Nelson averaged 38.3 yards per kickoff return for UAB his senior year and was the national leader in combined kick returns (kickoffs and punts).

FINAL ANALYSIS The Cardinals finished 11–5 last year despite Palmer being lost for the season in early November with a torn ACL and Ellington never being healthy all year. Palmer, whose quarterback rating was 95.6 (the second-highest mark of his career) at the time of his injury, makes Arizona's offense go; receivers Fitzgerald and Brown in particular were much more effective when he was behind center.

If there's a concern, it's the defense. Arizona lost key contributors at every level, from Dockett to Foote to Cromartie. The Cardinals still don't have a great edge pass rusher, and they have no idea if or when inside linebacker Daryl Washington will return from his league-imposed suspension. But if Arizona can figure out a way to be just average on defense, the offense should be good enough for another double-digit win season and a shot at supplanting Seattle atop the NFC West.

The Cardinals couldn't get a pass rusher or elite running back with their first-round pick, so their draft class may not have a big immediate impact. D.J. Humphries will compete for the right tackle job, but there's no guarantee he'll start. Arizona does have a need for an outside edge rusher, but Markus Golden has to make the switch from defensive end to linebacker, and some considered him a mid-round selection. David Johnson might play the most of the rookies; Arizona needed a big back to complement Andre Ellington, and Johnson could get the ball in short-yardage and goal-line situations. The Cardinals traded up to pick Gunter, who didn't play football in high school, in the fourth round. Shaquille Riddick was a one-year player at West Virginia after transferring from Gardner-Webb. J.J. Nelson, who ran a 4.28 at the Combine, could make the team as a kick returner. Gerald Christian was this draft's Mr. Irrelevant, the 256th and last pick.

SCOUTING THE CARDINALS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP ARIZONA

"Bruce Arians has an ability to tap into the mentality of pro players, and they have responded to his approach in a big way. ... If Carson Palmer can come back healthy, their passing game should pick up where it left off before his injury. ... Larry Fitzgerald is on the back-nine of his career, but between him, Michael Floyd and John Brown, they have an excellent combination of styles and ability. ... They drafted Florida offensive tackle D.J. Humphries in the first round and plan to insert him into the lineup right away. ... Arians is very high on running back Andre Ellington, but there were lots of doubts he could be the lead pony, and it proved to be true when he ran for only 660 yards. He did catch 46 passes. ... Left tackle Jared Veldheer was a solid addition in free agency last year, and the Cardinals hope left guard Mike Iupati (49ers) can do the same this year. He is a power player all the way and can help them improve their run game. ... Defensive coordinator Todd Bowles parlayed the Cardinals' defensive success into the head coaching job with the Jets, so James Bettcher takes over the role. ... Arizona is based in a 3-4, but they love to play their 'big' nickel/three-safety package. ... The window for winning is closing with an aging Palmer, so there is palpable urgency inside the building to make a huge push in 2015."

FIVE-YEAR WIN TREND

2011	2
2012	7

TRE MASON, RB

Coach Jeff Fisher and general manager Les Snead walked into a mess in 2012, inheriting a franchise that lost 65 of 80 games from 2007-11 — an NFL record for futility over a five-year span.

They brought the team back to respectability immediately with a 7–8–1 record in 2012. But as they enter their fourth season in St. Louis, the Rams haven't been able to get over the hump despite harvesting a bounty of draft picks in the RGIII trade. In fact, they've backslid a bit each season, going 7–9 in 2013 and 6–10 in '14.

After three consecutive years of entering the season as the youngest team in the league, that won't be the case this season. St. Louis has a roster full of young veterans who should be approaching their primes.

The Rams can no longer blame their woes on injuries to quarterback Sam Bradford. He was traded. So with a defense that should be formidable, there really are no excuses this season. It's win or go home.

OFFENSE After weeks of hearing Fisher and Snead utter variations of "Sam's our guy," Bradford was unceremoniously shipped off to Philadelphia for Nick Foles in a surprising trade that also included an exchange of draft picks. Foles' arrival is just part of a massive facelift on offense. The Rams also have a new offensive coordinator in Frank Cignetti and a new quarterbacks coach in Chris Weinke. They will have a new feature back in Todd Gurley and an overhauled offensive line.

Cignetti promises to streamline the playbook and simplify the play-calling. But the overall theory will remain the same for a Fisher-coached team: The Rams want to run the football, be physical and mix in the play-action pass. After a so-so 2014 season in Philadelphia that was over by midseason because of a broken collarbone, Foles will try to recapture some of the magic he displayed in 2013, when he threw 27 touchdowns with just two interceptions and had success throwing the deep ball.

A strong running game would obviously helps Foles out, and the hope around Rams Park is that Gurley is ready sooner rather than later as he completes his rehab from a November knee injury and subsequent surgery at Georgia. A healthy Gurley can be a game-changer, and paired with speedy Tre Mason — last year's Rams rushing leader as a rookie — St. Louis has the makings of a formidable one-two backfield punch.

The receiving corps returns intact — all five wideouts from the '14 squad and all four tight ends. In terms of continuity, that's a luxury few teams have. Kenny Britt and Brian Quick will provide big targets as the starting wide receivers, and once again the theme for Tavon Austin is to get more involved in the offense. We'll see if Cignetti can accomplish what predecessor Brian Schottenheimer couldn't on that front.

The key question comes on the offensive line, where the Rams are inexperienced and could have as many as three linemen making their first NFL starts to open 2015.

DEFENSE With the exception of a December meltdown against Odell Beckham Jr. and the Giants, the Rams had one of the league's elite defenses over the second half of 2014. There's no reason to believe they can't pick up where they left off. Defensive coordinator Gregg Williams, entering his second season with the club, knows his players and how to use them.

Basically the entire defense is back: Seven of the top nine defensive linemen from a year ago return, as do all three starting linebackers. All 11 defensive backs who were under contract at the end of 2014 remain under contract.

In short, the Rams could be formidable on this side off the ball. Robert Quinn and Chris Long are the bookends at end in the team's 4-3 alignment. Reigning NFL Defensive Rookie of the Year Aaron Donald provides a disruptive force at tackle with his quickness and savvy. Free-agent pickup Nick Fairley gives the Rams five first-round draft picks on their defensive front. If motivated and healthy, the former Detroit defensive tackle provides another playmaking presence in the trenches.

The addition of Akeem Ayers at outside linebacker gives the Rams yet another pass-rushing option; it will be interesting to see what packages Williams cooks up for him. James Laurinaitis is as steady as it gets in the middle. Alec Ogletree on the weak side has shown pursuit and playmaking ability in his first two NFL seasons but needs to get out of the gate quicker to start the season.

The strength of the secondary is the McSafeties — strong safety T.J. McDonald and free safety Rodney McLeod. McDonald is a thumper in the box; McLeod was much improved in

NEW ERA

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

GANG'S ALL HERE It's not unusual in a normal offseason for a team to turn over a quarter or a third of its roster. But the Rams came out of draft weekend with 49 of the 60 players from their 2014 season — a whopping 80 percent — still on their roster. That total of 60 players includes 53 players on the active roster and seven players on injured reserve at the end of '14. Other than the offensive line and quarterback, the team is returning virtually intact.

KUNG FU FIGHTING Always trying to improve his game, defensive tackle Michael Brockers has been doing martial arts training this offseason — and with none other than former Dallas Cowboys star Randy White. Brockers is trying to improve not only the use of his hands in fending off blockers but also his balance and footwork.

FAMILY TRADITION Seventh-round draft pick Bryce Hager is the son of Britt Hager, who played linebacker for the Rams in 1997 under Dick Vermeil. Current Rams coach Jeff Fisher was defensive coordinator in Philadelphia in 1989 when the Eagles drafted Britt — on Fisher's recommendation.

GETTING OFFENSIVE In his 19 previous drafts as an NFL head coach, dating all the way back to the Houston Oilers in 1995, Fisher had never started a draft by picking three offensive players in a row. Fisher, a former NFL safety and defensive coordinator, went way beyond that this year, selecting offensive players with the first seven picks of the Rams' draft.

YIKES That was running back Zac Stacy's one-word response on Twitter to the surprise selection of Todd Gurley at No. 10 overall. The addition of Gurley pushed Stacy to fourth string on the depth chart. He asked to be traded or released, and got his wish on Day 3 of the draft with a trade that sent him to the New York Jets. Gurley has taken jersey No. 30 (Stacy's old number) in St. Louis.

L.A. RAMS? With owner Stan Kroenke seemingly intent on moving the team to Los Angeles in 2016, this could be the last season for the Rams in St. Louis. Fisher says it won't be a distraction for the team in '15, but we'll see. The first casualty could be home-field advantage at the Edward Jones Dome, what with the possibility of disgruntled fans staying at home.

SEATTLE AGAIN? The Rams have had to make the long trek to the Pacific Northwest for a season-ending game in Seattle in four of the past five seasons, but not in 2015. The bad news? They must make back-to-back West Coast trips to close out the year — playing at Seattle for Game 15 and at San Francisco for Game 16.

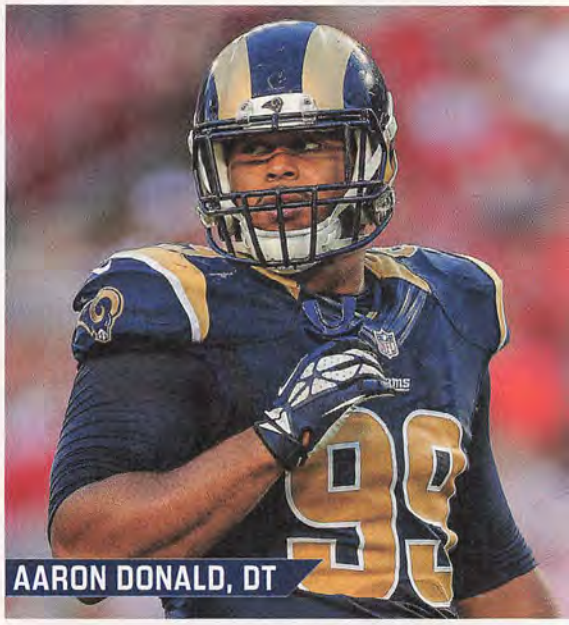
coverage a year ago. But the cornerbacks still give up too many big plays. Consistency remains elusive for Janoris Jenkins, who makes big plays at times and then gambles and gives up big plays at times. Look for Lamarcus Joyner, who at times looked overmatched as a rookie, to step up his play.



AARON DONALD, DT

SPECIALISTS Punter Johnny Hekker and placekicker Greg Zuerlein form one of the league's top kicking tandems. Hekker made the Pro Bowl in 2013 and was nearly as good in '14. He can punt for distance and direction and is amazingly consistent, almost never hitting a bad one. And watch out for him on trick plays: The former high school quarterback can't be ignored as a threat passing the ball out of punt formation. Zuerlein hasn't been booming them from long distance like he did in his 2012 rookie season, when he earned the nicknamed Greg The Leg, but his accuracy has improved. In the return game, Austin hasn't disappointed on punt returns. He still needs to be more decisive, with a little more north-and-south and a little less wiggle. But he has had a lot of big returns called back by penalties in his first two seasons, so a little more discipline by blockers should lead to bigger and better things. Benny Cunningham is an unlikely looking kickoff returner. While most are sleek and fast, Cunningham looks like a tank rumbling up field at 5'10" and 217 pounds.

FINAL ANALYSIS The Rams have invested a lot of money and high draft picks on the defense. Now it's time for that defense to carry the day by shutting teams down and flashing dominance whenever possible. That will be especially important early in the season while the offense gets its act together. Even without a 100 percent Gurley early, the Rams should have enough on offense with Mason and the receiving corps to grind out some victories. There are two big "ifs" attached here, however. Foles must stay healthy, and the offensive line must overcome its youth and provide effective protection. We're guessing Foles gets it done; it's a little more dicey when it comes to the offensive line. But after 11 long seasons at or below sea level, the ingredients are in place for the Rams to post their first winning season since 2003 and keep Fisher and Snead around for another year or more.

The Rams didn't select a defensive player until Round 7. Todd Gurley is a high-risk/high-reward pick who has big-time potential but is coming off knee surgery. With an already solid backfield, Gurley's a luxury pick who will reduce Tre Mason to backup status. By taking Gurley at No. 10, the Rams passed on taking Stanford's Andrus Peat, considered perhaps the best left tackle prospect in the draft. By trading down in the second round, they didn't take an offensive lineman until the 57th pick in Rob Havenstein, who probably starts at right tackle. He was the eighth tackle chosen in the draft. So the Rams got quantity in taking four offensive linemen, but did they get enough quality by waiting so long to address their most glaring needs? The Rams would like to make this a redshirt year for Sean Mannion at quarterback.

SCOUTING THE RAMS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP ST. LOUIS "Not sure how a possible move to L.A. affects the players and coaches in 2015, but the Rams certainly look like an organization on the move based upon owner Stan Kroenke's activities in Southern California. ... Brian Schottenheimer left for Georgia as offensive coordinator, so Frank Cignetti takes over, and he will need better play from a substandard offensive line. ... At pick No. 10, they opted for talent over need as Georgia running back Todd Gurley was the choice. He is coming off a November ACL, but they saw him as the best player in the entire 2015 class. ... This is a defensive-centric team, but after a slow start in 2014, they only finished tied for 16th in scoring and 17th in total yards. ... Their front line has phenomenal talent. ... In the back end, the Rams traded for Bucs' safety Mark Barron in October, and they are hoping that he, T.J. McDonald and Rodney McLeod can give them the ability to put three safeties on the field together to contend with tight ends Vernon Davis and Jimmy Graham. ... With San Francisco losing so many starting-caliber players in the offseason, maybe the door is open for the Rams to get out of the NFC West cellar. ... How Nick Foles plays behind a shaky offensive line will determine much of what happens both on and off the field in 2015."

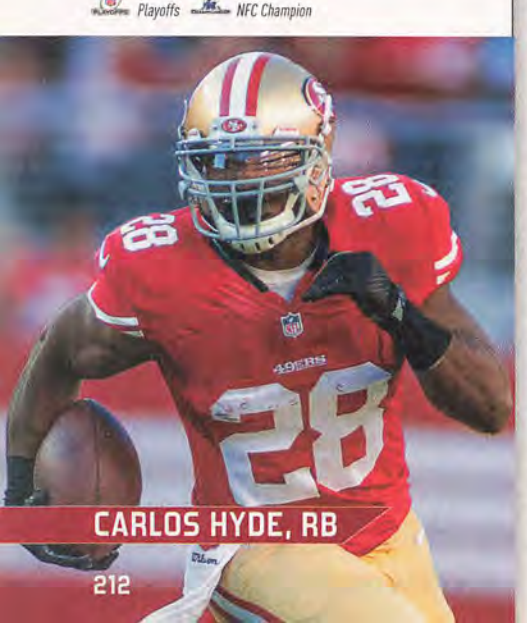
FIVE-YEAR WIN TREND



CARLOS HYDE, RB

After leading the 49ers to the NFC title game three times and the Super Bowl once in his first three years, Jim Harbaugh saw his reign in San Francisco end with a tumultuous, dysfunctional 8–8 season. Harbaugh says he was pushed out by 49ers owner Jed York and general manager Trent Baalke. The team claims there was a "mutual" decision to part ways. The bottom line is the 49ers lost a coach who went 49–22–1 (including the postseason) and replaced him with Jim Tomsula, their longtime defensive line coach. Tomsula's only experience as a head coach came during one season in the defunct NFL Europe and the 49ers' final game in 2010 after they fired Mike Singletary.

"Jim did a heck of a job," Baalke says of Harbaugh, who took the job as Michigan's coach. "I think he's gone his direction, we've gone ours. I feel very good about the direction we're headed, and I'm sure he does as well."

Defensive coordinator Vic Fangio, the architect of San Francisco's elite defense, left to fill the same position with the Chicago Bears after being bypassed for the 49ers' top job. The 49ers promoted offensive assistant coach Eric Mangini, a former NFL head coach and defensive coordinator, to replace Fangio. Offensive coordinator Greg Roman left for the same job with the Buffalo Bills after taking much of the blame for the 49ers' offensive futility in 2015. Quarterbacks coach Geep Chryst was promoted to replace Roman. Chryst's only experience as an offensive coordinator was in 1999-2000 for the Chargers under Mike Riley.

Tomsula will try to resurrect a 49ers team that lost a long list of key players, including running back Frank Gore, guard Mike Iupati and linebacker Patrick Willis.

OFFENSE The 49ers believe Harbaugh and Roman strayed too far from the power-running attack last season in an attempt to boost their anemic passing game. Quarterback Colin Kaepernick actually regressed, and the 49ers ranked a dismal 25th in scoring at 19.1 points per game, down from 11th (25.4) in 2013. Kaepernick's passer rating dropped from 91.6 in 2013 to 86.4 last year, and the 49ers ranked 30th in passing offense, exactly where they ranked in 2013. For the first time in Harbaugh's four seasons, the 49ers had more passing attempts (487) than runs (470). Even so, the 49ers ranked fourth in the league in rushing at 136.0 yards per game.

As Chryst tries to get the 49ers' offense untracked, he won't have Gore, the franchise's all-time leading rusher, to lean on. Gore signed with Indianapolis as a free agent after the 49ers showed little interest in keeping him. Carlos Hyde, who rushed for 333 yards and four touchdowns on 83 carries in a solid rookie season, will start and should get most of the carries. But he'll share the running load with veteran Reggie Bush, a key free-agent pickup, and Kendall Hunter, who's returning from a knee injury.

The 49ers lost wide receiver Michael Crabtree in free agency, but they added former Ravens wideout Torrey Smith, giving Kaepernick a legitimate deep threat for the first time. Smith will be paired with Anquan Boldin, one of the NFL's most physical receivers. The 49ers need former Pro Bowl tight end Vernon Davis to rebound after catching just 26 passes for 245 yards and two touchdowns.

San Francisco's offensive line, which had long been a team strength, needs to bounce back, too. Kaepernick was sacked 52 times last season, and the line was in disarray most of the season. Center Daniel Kilgore missed the final nine games with a broken leg. Right tackle Anthony Davis missed nines games with assorted injuries. Right guard Alex Boone reported late because of a contract dispute and never got untracked, and he's still unhappy with his contract. After the season, the 49ers lost Pro Bowl left guard Iupati to Arizona as a free agent. Brandon Thomas, who missed his rookie season last year with an ACL injury, should get the first shot at replacing Iupati, but he'll battle free-agent pickup Erik Pears. Left tackle Joe Staley, a four-time Pro Bowl choice, still anchors a line that needs to regain its spot among the NFL's elite.

DEFENSE The hits kept on coming during the offseason for a 49ers defense that is still solid but nowhere near the force it was a few years ago. Willis, a seven-time Pro Bowl pick, retired in early March because of chronic foot injuries. Days later Chris Borland, his backup, retired because of health concerns over concussions. Defensive end Ray McDonald was released after yet another off-field incident. The 49ers lost two of their top three cornerbacks — Chris Culliver and Perrish Cox — to free agency. What's more, Pro Bowl defensive end Justin Smith is contemplating retirement. The 49ers used a first-round draft pick on Oregon defensive

OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

A STAR ON AND OFF THE FIELD The 49ers have drafted and signed more than their share of players with checkered pasts who wound up getting into trouble off the field. But when they signed free agent wide receiver Torrey Smith to a five-year, $40 million contract, they had no such concerns. Twice during his four seasons with the Baltimore Ravens, Smith was the team's nominee for the NFL's Walter Payton Man of the Year Award. Smith became known as much for his charitable works in Baltimore as he was for his game-breaking plays. "There's not one person that has a negative thing to say about Torrey Smith," 49ers general manger Trent Baalke says.

NEW-LOOK QB Quarterback Colin Kaepernick spent 10 weeks during the offseason at the EXOS training facility in Arizona, working on his mechanics and his mental approach. During that span he spent some time working with Kurt Warner, a two-time NFL MVP. "I feel like there's been quite a bit of change," Kaepernick says. "I just wanted to do everything I can to make sure I'm getting better and doing my part to help this team win." Tight end Vernon Davis says he noticed the change in Kaepernick immediately. "He looks like a totally different guy," Davis says.

SHARING THE LOAD Reggie Bush's numbers were down last year in an injury-shortened season with Detroit, but the 49ers expect him to bounce back and be a dangerous weapon this year, sharing time with likely starter Carlos Hyde and reserve Kendall Hunter. Two years ago, Bush rushed for 1,006 yards and four touchdowns and caught 54 passes for 506 yards and three touchdowns with the Lions. "He's not a gadget guy, in my opinion," 49ers coach Jim Tomsula says. "Reggie Bush is a running back. I'm real excited about Reggie joining the crew. Right now we got three guys in the backfield we feel great about. They're all just a little different from each other."

RUGBY STAR TRYING TO CATCH ON The 49ers under Bill Walsh signed world-class hurdler Renaldo Nehemiah and used him as a wide receiver. This year, general manager Trent Baalke signed Jarryd Hayne, a rugby superstar from Australia, in hopes that he can become a running back or return man in the NFL. He signed a three-year, $1.583 million dollar deal with $116,000 guaranteed. "A phenomenal athlete," Kaepernick says of Hayne. "Just a natural."

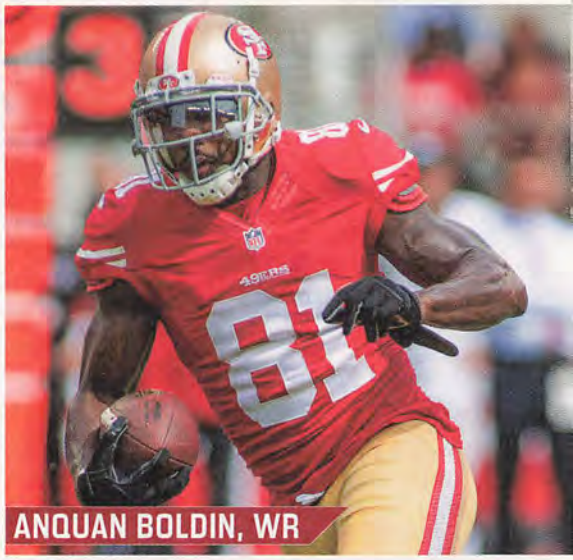
end Arik Armstead, but he needs time to develop. Veteran defensive lineman Darnell Dockett, a free-agent pickup, is coming off a knee injury that forced him to miss the entire 2014 season. Young D-linemen Quinton Dial and Tank Carradine might have to take larger roles.

The 49ers' biggest loss on defense could well be Fangio, who set the bar extremely high. Under Fangio, the 49ers' ranked as high as third and never dropped below fifth in total yards allowed.

The 49ers expect to have All-Pro inside linebacker NaVorro Bowman back in the lineup after he missed the entire 2014 season while recovering from a devastating knee injury. Starting cornerback Tramaine Brock missed most of last season with a turf toe injury but is expected to regain a spot in the starting lineup and be paired with ex-Chargers cornerback Shareece Wright, a free-agent pickup. The 49ers have one of the NFL's top safety tandems in Eric Reid and Antoine Bethea. Outside linebacker Aldon Smith, who had 19.5 sacks in 2012, should get back on track after being suspended the first nine games last season for violating the NFL's personal conduct and substance-abuse policies.



ANQUAN BOLDIN, WR

SPECIALISTS Punter Andy Lee and kicker Phil Dawson have formed one of the best kicking tandems in the NFL. But they're coming off of subpar seasons, by their lofty standards, and Lee could be on his way out. The 49ers used a fifth-round pick to draft Clemson punter Bradley Pinion, who doubles as a kickoff man. That could turn out to be a key skill, considering that Dawson struggled to kick the ball deep. As a rookie last season, wide receiver Bruce Ellington handled most of the return duties. Jarryd Hayne, a rugby superstar from Australia, was signed as a free agent and could give Ellington some competition.

FINAL ANALYSIS The 49ers won't have to deal with as much dysfunction this year, but they lost a lot of talent, both on the field and in the coaching ranks. Baalke did little in free agency or the draft to help the 49ers' struggling offense. The 49ers finished third in the NFC West last year, and it's difficult to see them finishing ahead of defending division champion Seattle or Arizona, which was second. Even holding off the last-place St. Louis Rams could be a problem.

Arik Armstead is a potential replacement for Justin Smith, who's considering retirement. Armstead fits the 49ers' 3-4 scheme, which requires linemen to be strong and athletic enough to cover two gaps, but he's still a raw talent. Jaquiski Tartt could be groomed to replace starting strong safety Antoine Bethea. He'll likely have a role in a nickel package this season. Eli Harold gives the 49ers another edge rusher. Tight end Blake Bell, a converted quarterback, could be used in the backfield in short-yardage and goal-line packages, as he was at Oklahoma. Running back Mike Davis fills a need for a second power runner in case starter Carlos Hyde is injured. Bradley Pinion, the only punter taken in the draft, doubles as a kickoff man and could take Andy Lee's job, saving some cap space.

SCOUTING THE 49ers

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP FRANCISCO "As many in the league anticipated, the 49ers brass got what they wanted at the end of 2014 — head coach Jim Harbaugh departing for another job. Defensive line coach Jim Tomsula takes over, and he was rumored to be the internal favorite all along. ... Colin Kaepernick spent the offseason in Arizona re-tooling his mechanics, and it will be interesting to see if that training can translate to the season. ... The offensive line is still in the top third, if everyone is healthy, and should bounce back from a subpar showing in 2014. ... Anquan Boldin had his seventh 1,000-yard-plus season despite the 49ers ranking 30th in passing. ... Maybe the biggest key for Kaepernick will be getting tight end Vernon Davis back into the offense. ... On defense, end Darnell Dockett decided to stay within the division, and he will bolster the front in the absence of Ray McDonald (Bears) and the potential retirement of Justin Smith. ... They also drafted Oregon end Arik Armstead to help put the unit back together again. ... The linebacker position was jolted when All-Pro Patrick Willis, their spiritual leader, retired at age 30, only to have rookie Chris Borland walk away from the sport less than a week later. ... On paper, the 49ers have definitely taken a step back from a personnel perspective. Now we will see if the same is true in coaching as well."

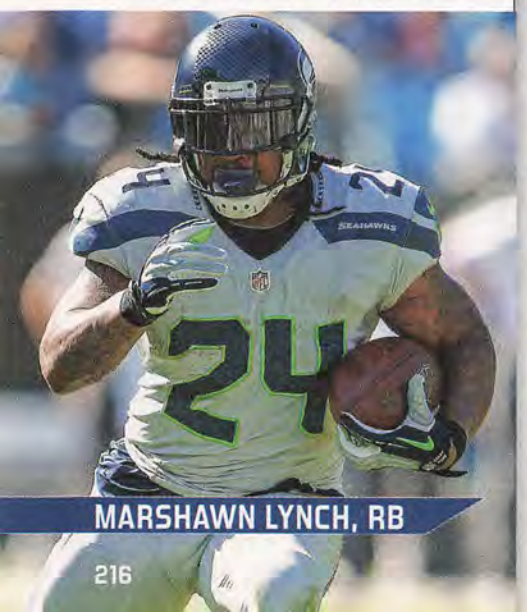
FIVE-YEAR WIN TREND

Playoffs NFC Champion Super Bowl Champion



MARSHAWN LYNCH, RB

The Seahawks were less than a yard from the end zone — a Marshawn Lynch plunge from sure victory, just 26 seconds from becoming an NFL dynasty — when they made what has been labeled the worst play call in Super Bowl history.

In the wake of Russell Wilson's disastrous goal-line interception against New England, preventing consecutive victories for this team on pro football's largest stage, Seattle will attempt to shake off any lingering residue and resume its role as a championship contender.

Outside of a blockbuster trade — acquiring tight end Jimmy Graham and a fourth-round draft pick from New Orleans for one-time Pro Bowl center Max Unger and a first-round selection — the Seahawks didn't make mass changes. They used the offseason to forgive and forget.

Seattle retains all of its important ingredients — the vaunted defense, inhospitable stadium, feel-good coach, durable Lynch and now rededicated Wilson — as it attempts to become the third team to make three or more consecutive Super Bowl appearances, joining Miami (1972-74) and Buffalo (1991-94). At 30–8 (including playoffs), the Seahawks still have the best record in the league for two seasons running. There's plenty to play for, especially redemption. "I won't allow one play or one moment to define my career," Wilson promises. "Every setback has a major comeback."

OFFENSE Any major retooling for this team will come across the offensive line, where two starters must be replaced, seemingly a yearly chore. Patrick Lewis and Alvin Bailey are the new center and left guard, respectively, though not all that new. Lewis started four times in place of Unger, with his steady performance making it easier for the team to part with the incumbent player. The versatile Bailey was in the opening lineup five times at three different line positions, starting on three occasions for departed left guard James Carpenter, a former first-round draft pick who couldn't stay healthy and earn the team's considerable investment in him. Bailey, with his long arms and good balance, was especially effective against the pass rush. Left tackle Russell Okung, right tackle Justin Britt and right guard J.R. Sweezy are returning starters — solid, rather than upper-echelon players.

The big position upgrade was adding Graham to the receiving corps, giving the Seahawks something they haven't had for several seasons — a superior pass-catcher. Graham's 51 touchdowns in five seasons in New Orleans and general elusiveness bode well for his new team's preference to emphasize the tight end position, which also features speedy Luke Willson. Seattle had a combined 48 tight end receptions in 2014, sixth fewest in the NFL, necessitating added help. Holdover wideouts Jermaine Kearse and Doug Baldwin are capable of making big plays but often go unnoticed for long stretches. Rookie Tyler Lockett will get an opportunity to cut into their playing time.

The backfield is the only place on the offense that remains unchanged. Lynch continues to defy the standard aging process for an NFL running back, to the point the Seahawks signed him in the offseason to a three-year, $31 million contract extension. Considering the punishment he takes and delivers, the player known as Beast Mode might be good for just one more year. At 29, he's turned in four consecutive regular seasons of more than 1,200 rushing yards while carrying the ball nearly 1,200 times, numbers that typically invite rapid decline.

Wilson returns for his fourth season, offering a Seahawks career highlighted by a 42–14 overall record as a starter and a resounding Super Bowl championship. The team is hoping Wilson's slow-paced contract-extension negotiations don't detract from his play.

DEFENSE No unit across the NFL is more respected, feared or solidified than the Seattle defense. It returns all but one starter, needing only an able cornerback replacement for the departed Byron Maxwell. The Seahawks come off three consecutive seasons as the league leader in scoring defense, something not done since Minnesota from 1969-71, after limiting opposing teams to a modest 15.9 points per game in 2014. Talk persists that this is one of the league's better defenses of modern times.

The front four gets an effective push from ends Michael Bennett and Cliff Avril and tackles Tony McDaniel and Jordan Hill. Bennett, the best of this bunch, reportedly used his status to demand a trade (which he denied) and skipped voluntary workouts. The tackles get much-needed depth with the return of former starter Brandon Mebane from a season-ending hamstring injury and the free-agent acquisition of Cleveland starter Ahtyba Rubin.

The linebacking corps is just as sturdy as the front wall if not a lot less complicated, comprised of K.J. Wright and Bruce Irvin on the outside flanking Bobby Wagner. A former

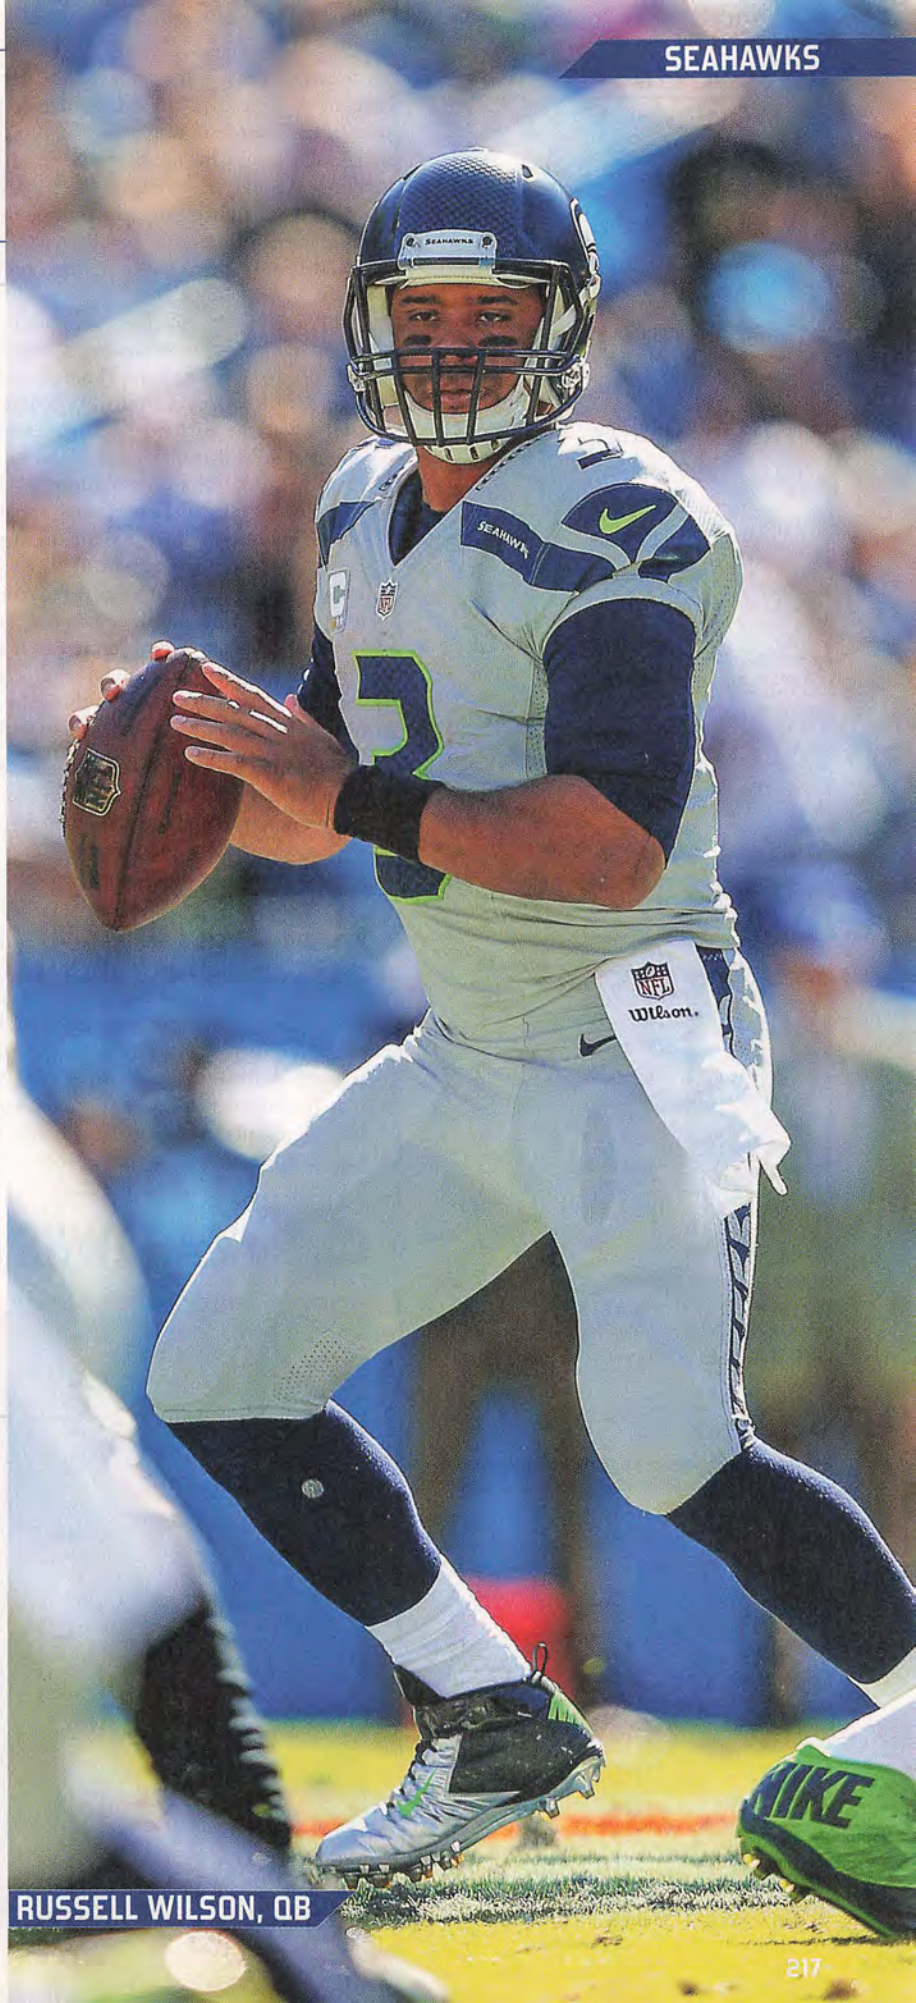
NEW ERA



OUTSIDE THE HUDDLE

LET'S BE FRIENDS Jimmy Graham and Bruce Irvin tangled before a January 2014 playoff game, exchanging shoves and insults. As new teammates, everything appears to be forgiven. The former New Orleans tight end and Seahawks linebacker posed for a mock fight photo on Instagram with other Seattle players shown trying to intervene, accompanied by the following tag: #loveourbrothers.

MONEY MATTERS GM John Schneider drew quizzical looks around Seattle when he spoke frankly about Russell Wilson's contract negotiations, indicating in an offhand manner how anything could happen. "We'd love him to be our quarterback, but the thing is we need to keep as many of these guys together as we possibly can," Schneider said. "What I can tell you is that this is the ultimate team sport."

ROSTER REMNANTS Defensive tackle Brandon Mebane and punter Jon Ryan are the only inherited players still with the franchise when Pete Carroll became coach in 2010, first surviving the 284-plus roster moves during Carroll's initial season.

NIGHT MOVES Rewarded for their repeated success, the Seahawks will turn up on prime time TV as much as any NFL team this season. They have been assigned night games on Thursday (at San Francisco), Sunday (at Green Bay, Arizona, at Baltimore) and Monday (Detroit), with the possibility of another contest getting elevated. The maximum for any team is six.

WHAT'S MY LINE? An offseason report suggested that Seahawks defensive end Michael Bennett wanted a trade to Atlanta, where former Seattle defensive coordinator Dan Quinn is the new head coach, and Bennett offered this unique rebuttal: "Man, like I said, they made rumors about Jesus, they'll make rumors about anybody."

DEFENSIVE REWARDS It's no secret that defense has fueled the Seahawks' success of three consecutive playoff berths, handiwork that has brought promotions. The team will turn to its third defensive coordinator in four seasons, with Gus Bradley leaving to become the Jacksonville coach in 2012, Quinn now in place as the Atlanta coach and former Seahawks cornerback Kris Richard moving up from secondary coach to run the Seattle defense.

SPRING FEVER Wilson spent part of a second spring training with the Texas Rangers, the baseball organization that owns his playing rights, and he didn't totally refute someday trying to juggle two big-league sporting pursuits. "I never wanted to kill the dream of playing two sports," he said. "I would honestly play two sports."

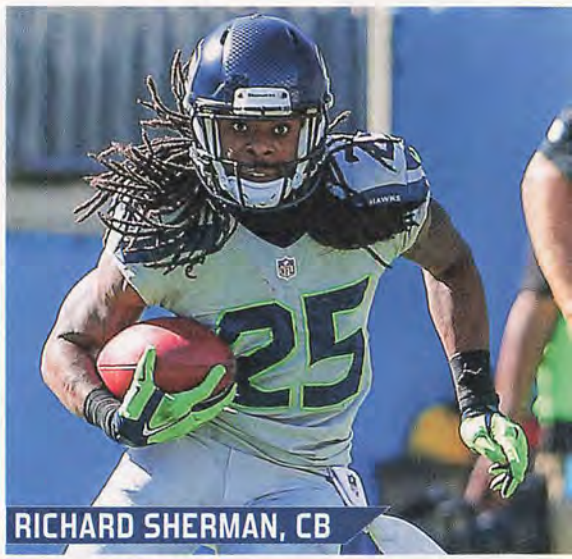
defensive end, Irvin is the flashy one, scoring twice in 2014 on interception returns. However, Wagner is the indispensible one, with the Seahawks stumbling through a lackluster 3–2 spell when a toe injury sidelined the highly productive player who has been compared to Ray Lewis and others because of his dependability.

The real jewel of this smothering group remains the secondary, manned by All-Pro safeties Earl Thomas and Kam Chancellor and similarly decorated cornerback Richard Sherman, and one that still identifies itself as the Legion of Boom. The three returnees are all potential Hall of Famers, each capable of holding his own in one-on-one coverage without the benefit of blitzing teammates. Thomas is considered the league's best at his position, Sherman at his. Each of them played injured in the Super Bowl. Sherman came up with a team-best six interceptions, counting the postseason, even as most teams refused to throw his way. Maxwell's replacement will come from among offseason acquisitions Cary Williams and Will Blackmon and holdover Tharold Simon.



RICHARD SHERMAN, CB

SPECIALISTS For four consecutive seasons now, the Seahawks' kicking game has been in solid hands across the board. Placekicker Steven Hauschka has extended his field-goal range to 58 yards and been no worse than 83 percent on accuracy, while punter Jon Ryan averaged 44.1 yards per kick and threw a crucial postseason touchdown pass. Where the team needs a noticeable boost is in each return game, where a multitude of players failed to post a run-back longer than 47 yards. Lockett was drafted to fill this need.

FINAL ANALYSIS The Seahawks still have the talent to make another Super Bowl run, which is getting almost routine for the franchise. Over the previous decade, just three teams took three trips to the big game: Pittsburgh (2–1), New England (1–2) and Seattle (1–2). While there's always concern that complacency, big-contract squabbles or, in this case, bitter disappointment will break up a good thing, the Seahawks would be pursuing an unprecedented third consecutive Super Bowl victory and entertaining best-ever chatter if not for that fateful interception against the Patriots. Provided the offensive line comes together, there's still football life in Lynch, and Wilson has a short memory, this team should be a serious postseason factor once more.

SEAHAWKS IN THE DRAFT

The Seahawks needed a kick returner more than anything and used four draft picks to move up and take the speedy Tyler Lockett. Though smaller than Seattle's typical wide receiver, he should help out there, too. Of three offensive linemen selected, Terry Poole is the best bet to play right away because of his versatility; he's an interchangeable part at tackle, guard and center. Kristjan Sokoli is the team's annual creative draft choice; he played defensive line in college, but will be tried at offensive guard, similar to what Seattle did with current starter J.R. Sweezy from the 2012 draft. The Seahawks took a gamble on top pick Frank Clark, a defensive end with high-end potential but a domestic-violence history that got him dismissed at Michigan. "We have done a ton of research on this young man," GM John Schneider told reporters in the days following the draft.

SCOUTING THE SEAHAWKS

OPPOSING SCOUTS SIZE UP SEATTLE

"Don't expect a case of the Super Bowl 'blues' with this team. Pete Carroll and John Schneider really operate from the same sheet of music in terms of communicating their philosophy of competition and high energy for the entire organization. ... The Russell Wilson contract extension has been a theme of the offseason, but expect something to get done before they go to camp in late July (with maybe a precedent-setting fully guaranteed structure). ... Wilson is exceptionally instinctive as a player, and with the trade for tight end Jimmy Graham, he will have another option down the seam and on scrambles. ... Because of Graham's capacity to detach and play from the slot, his presence should create even more air inside the box for running back Marshawn Lynch. ... Defensive coordinator Dan Quinn departed for the Falcons' head coaching position, but Seattle still has talent at every level of the D. ... They have more of a 'rotational' front four now, but the linebackers complement each other well and play outstanding football. ... People around the league know exactly how good Bobby Wagner is. ... Earl Thomas and Kam Chancellor form the best safety tandem in the NFL. They are spectacular together, but of course, Thomas is coming off shoulder surgery and may not be available until October."

2014 WAS THE FIRST TIME THAT...

By Bruce Herman

A TEAM

» Won a game by 17 points after being shut out by at least that many points in the first half (Eagles over Jaguars).

» Shoveled itself out of 14-point second-half deficits to win each of its first two games of the year (Eagles).

» Opened a season 3–0 despite trailing in each game by at least 10 points (Eagles).

» Won a game on the road that it once trailed by 25 points (Browns).

» Fielded a running back who rushed for four touchdowns (Marshawn Lynch) and a quarterback who rushed for 100 yards (Russell Wilson) in the same game (Seahawks).

» Lost at least nine of its first 10 games for a third consecutive season (Jaguars).

» Scored 28 or more first-half points in four consecutive home games (Packers).

» Won three games in a row by 20 or more points against teams who were at least three games over .500 (Patriots).

» Fielded a rookie rusher (Andre Williams) and a rookie receiver (Odell Beckham Jr.) who each piled up at least 130 yards in the same game (Giants).

» Went 14 consecutive seasons without being swept in a multiple-game series by a team in its own division (Patriots).

» Allowed an opposing QB to complete 80 percent of its passes and throw for three TDs in three games of a season (Bears).

» Rushed for as many as 355 yards and lost (49ers).

» Had two different backs who broke runs of 85 yards or longer in the same season (Bengals: Gio Bernard and Jeremy Hill).

» From the NFC South won its division for a second straight year (Panthers).

» Got a non-offensive TD from 10 different players (Eagles).

» Dropped a fourth consecutive opening-round playoff game (Bengals).

» Blew a fourth-quarter lead as large as 10 points to lose a Super Bowl (Seahawks).

A QUARTERBACK

» Passed for 400 yards for the 14th time in a career (Peyton Manning).

» Compiled a TD-to-INT ratio as high as 18-to-1 the first seven games of a season (Aaron Rodgers).

» Threw a fifth TD pass less than 20 minutes into a game (Joe Flacco).

» Completed more than 85 percent of his passes (min. 20 atts.) in a game against a defending Super Bowl champion (Austin Davis).

» Who attempted 40 or more passes in a game posted a rating above 150.0.

» Charted two 500-yard aerial games in a career.

» Threw for six TDs in back-to-back games.

» Passed for 350-plus yards in five consecutive road games (Andrew Luck).

» Completed at least five TD passes in a game nine times in a career (Manning and Drew Brees).

» Attained a 100.0 passer rating in a sixth consecutive season (Rodgers).

» Lost nine one-and-done starts in the postseason (Manning).

» Started six Super Bowls (Tom Brady).

A RUNNING BACK

» Rushed for more than 525 yards in his first three games facing a specific team (DeMarco Murray vs. St. Louis).

» Began a season with eight consecutive 100-yard games (Murray).

» Caught 102 passes in a season (Matt Forte).

» Rushed for seven career TDs against one particular team in postseason play (LeGarrette Blount vs. Colts).

A RECEIVER

» Made at least five catches for 50 or more yards in 32 consecutive games (Antonio Brown).

» Age 35 or older caught 400 yards worth of passes in his first four games (Steve Smith).

» Caught a dozen or more TD passes from the tight end position in successive seasons (Julius Thomas).

» Collected more than 100 yards in a season debut that was as late as Week 12 (Josh Gordon).

» Got to 10,000 yards in as few as 115 games (Calvin Johnson).

» Threw a TD pass of longer than 50 yards in a postseason game (Julian Edelman).

IMMEDIATE CASH PAYOUTS TO WINNERS | ONE-DAY FANTASY FOOTBALL LEAGUES FOR REAL MONEY | NO SEASON-LONG COMMITMENT

CHRIS PRINCE - FANDUEL USER SINCE 2010

FanDuel is a whole new way of playing fantasy football. Every league lasts just one day. The money is real and winners get paid that same night. And there's no season-long commitment. You only play when you want.

This is Chris Prince. He's beermakersfan on FanDuel, and he has plenty of reasons to smile. This 37-year-old from Detroit has won $724,938 playing in one-day fantasy leagues on FanDuel.

A New Way to Play Fantasy Football!
FanDuel is the hottest thing in fantasy football. Our one-week fantasy football leagues pack the thrill of an entire season into just one week. You play for real money against other people and winners get paid cash that same week.

Over $40 Million Cash Paid Out to Winners Every Single Week
FanDuel paid out over $500 million in cash to over 853,000 league winners in 2014. That number is only getting bigger. We'll be paying out over $2 billion cash to winners in 2015, including $40 million every week of the NFL season. That's a huge number and you may be skeptical, but don't be. Our cash prize pools can be this large because we literally have over a million players today and thousands more joining every single day.

How is This Different From Season-Long Fantasy Football?

- Salary cap leagues that last one week
- Huge variety of league sizes and prize pools
- Instant weekly cash payouts to league winners
- No season-long commitment - you only play when you want
- Thousands of one-week money leagues run every week of the season
- Play for real money - use your credit card or Paypal
